PERFORMANCE TEST METHODS

Rules Are Drawn Up by Bureau of Standards for Investigation of New Apparatus.

Owing to the very large demand which has arisen for simple radio receiving sets, many retail dealers in other lines of work have taken up the handling of such equipment. It is very difficult for such dealers to decide whether sets offered by the manufacturers are of good or poor quality, says Radio Merchandising. The whole art is so new and some of the questions involved are so technical that the problem presents considerable difficulties.

As a consequence, the Department of Commerce, and particularly the bureau of standards, has received a great many requests for tests of such apparatus. As it is impossible for the bureau to conduct all the work of this nature which it would be called upon to perform, it has drawn up rules covering performance test methods which are to be carried out by the Electrical Testing Laboratories of New York in co-operation with the National Retail Dry Goods association, the latter representing the retailers of radio receiving sets. As the work develops, suggestions regarding improvements of methods of testing will be subject to the approval of the bureau of standards.

The tests outlined include: Investigation as to the material and workmanship, the mechanical and electrical design, simplicity of adjustment, ruggedness, sensitivity, sharpness of tuning, wave length range and faithfulness of reproduction in radio telephone reception.

CONVEY MEANING IN DANCE

Artists of India Reveal by Gestures a Fundamental Concept of Life Itself.

There is an essential difference between the dance of the East and of the West. Both spring from rhythmic creative impulse, of course, the desire to express an emotion, but western dancing has come to signify little more than an elaboration of movement, a multiplicity of complex steps, while eastern dancing still strives to symbolize by graceful gestures identified with a succession of beautiful poses some fundamental concept of life itself. The dance of the East carries with it something not of time. For it is half sculpture. The sacred origin of dancing in India—typified by the god Shiva who conveys through rhythmic play a sense of all movement, of all creation, within the cosmos, together with the release of the souls of men from ensnaring illusion, may be traced in the half-ruined reliefs of Indian inspiration found as far east as the island of Bali, beyond Java, and north throughout Burma and Siam into Cambodia. And still today like figures repeat the familiar patterns. The lifted foot with bent knee, symbolizing release from the material, the up-raised hand with thumb and forefinger holding an imaginary flower tribute, these and a hundred other gestures give out their identical message of spirit made manifest, in the ancient East. The East is content with its old, beautiful formulas. It does not ask for variety of self-expression. Beauty once found is beauty worshiped throughout the ages.—From the Pattern of the Eastern Dance, by Gertrude Emerson in Asia Magazine.

POINTED OUT DANGER IN CUP

John Wesley Set His Face Sternly Against the Drinking of Tea—Himself a Victim.

John Wesley was against tea drinking. During a visit to Oxford he noticed, among what he described as "paralytic symptoms," the shaking of his hand, and he was puzzled to explain it, until, as he wrote to a friend, "I observed it was always worst after breakfast, and that if I intermitted drinking tea for two or three days it did not shake at all." At first he was content to add more water, sugar and milk, but finding, on inquiry, that there were others who were similarly affected, or thought themselves to be, he came to the conclusion that he ought to abstain altogether, and to endeavor to persuade others to follow his example.

Sir Walter Besant tells of the writer of a pamphlet in 1758 who was alarmed at the spreading of the custom of drinking tea, especially by "persons of an inferior rank and mean abilities." When taken in company with gossips, said the author, a dram too often followed, and then came scandal, with falsehoods, perversions and back-bitings.

Wesley does not seem to have advanced such lofty moral considerations. In fact, after suggesting to his friend a number of substitutes—chiefly herbs—he concluded: "If you find none of them well agree with your constitution, then use (weak green) tea again; but at the same time know that your having used it so long has brought you near the chambers of death."

Floating Islands.

Natural floating islands sometimes are seen in the Mississippi and other rivers, and in lakes, occasionally being of sufficient size to serve as pastures. They are formed of earth which is held together in a compact form by roots interlacing, and they float because they are not heavy enough nor sufficiently waterlogged to sink. They have their origin in river banks which have been torn away and carried down stream by a powerful current, and sometimes trees remain growing on these islands. Artificial floating islands are made by taking rafts of wickerwork, covering them with reeds, and then placing lake mud on top. They are used by some of the natives of India, Persia and Tibet to grow cucumbers, melons and other plants which require a lot of water. Artificial islands of this nature at one time were used in the waters about Mexico.

Bank of England.

The Bank of England was founded by William Paterson (1658-1719), a long-headed Lowland Scot from Tynwald parish, in Dumfriesshire, skillful in finance and in matters of trade. It was the first public bank in Great Britain and was chartered in 1694. It was projected to meet the difficulty experienced by King William III in raising the supplies for the war against France. By the influence of William Paterson and Michael Godfrey, 40 merchants (aided by Charles Montague) subscribed £500,000 toward the sum of £1,200,000 to be lent to the government at 8 per cent, in consideration of the subscribers being incorporated as a bank. The project was strongly opposed in parliament, but the bill secured the royal assent April 25, 1694.

EVANGELIST TO END CAMPAIGN SUNDAY NIGHT

of the three essentials of a text, said, "I take a text, I leave it, and I never go back to it." He dwelt particularly on the story of the children of Israel being delivered out of bondage. How every plague was sent upon Pharaoh, but still he hardened his heart, and would not let them go. And when they went and were pursued by the hosts of Pharaoh, typifying sin, they could not go back, and an impassible mountain was on either side, and Red Sea, typifying the blood of Christ, in front of them. The children of Israel became impatient, and said it were better to serve the Egyptians than to die in the wilderness, but Moses said, "Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord." Then Moses lifted his rod, and the waters parted, and the children walked over on dry land. The host pursuing them ran into the waters of the sea and were lost. The thought being that the sins (Egyptians) of the children of Israel were washed away in the blood of Christ (the red sea). There was a great healing service, which was opposed by skepticism at the beginning, but was overcome by God's people in prayer. And the tarrying meeting at the Baptist church was filled with the power and spirit of the Lord.
