National Forest Camp Grounds In Oregon Are Visited By 284,176 During The Year

National forest camp grounds in Oregon were visited during the season just closed by 284,176 persons, according to estimates prepared by Assistant District Forester C. J. Buck, based upon reports from the various supervisors. This takes in only the camps where there has been some degree of development and does not include the thousands of lesser frequented places reached only by trail.

The Oregon national forest in the Mount Hood region shows the greatest number of campground visitors, with 172,240, most of whom stopped at Eagle creek campground on the Columbia river highway. The Deschutes national forest, tributary to Bend and popular for its lake country, came second with 39,200, while the Siskiyou forest in southwestern Oregon jumped to third place of 25,760, because of the new road to the Oregon caves. The Crater national forest was fourth with 17,500 visitors, most of whom were on their way to Crater Lake national park.

In the Oregon forest, tributary to Portland, there were an estimated 150,000 visitors at Eagle creek, 15,000 at Lost lake, 2600 at Larch mountain, 800 at Toll Gate and 800 at Clear lake.

Twelve thousand persons, mostly Californians, stopped at Union creek campgrounds on the way to Crater Lake, and some stopped for several weeks. At Huckleberry City, likewise on the Crater forest, the register showed 2500 visitors, but some of these camped on the spot for two months.

Although Breitenbush Hot Springs on the Santiam national forest out of Detroit is reached only over a 12-mile trail, there were 1000 persons there this year.

At Grayback camp on the road to the Oregon caves, for which the forest service has just received an appropriation for development, were 5000 guests, and 4000 persons visited Diamond lake.

In the Mount Adams country on the Washington side of the Columbia river, which is becoming increasingly popular with Portland residents, Government Mineral Springs showed a registration of 8000 persons during the year. The hotel and campgrounds have both been overflowing. An additional 40 rooms is being added to the building and the campgrounds are being extended to care for the crowds who flock to the mineral springs.

after her suspension, and claims she was given no opportunity to clear herself of the charges brought against her. She then brought action in the Montgomery county court at Norristown, Pa., to compel Bryn Mawr authorities to reinstate her, but the court ruled it had "no jurisdiction" over a privately endowed institution and was forced to recognize the right of the college to drop a student any time, without explanation.

and seats, 140 fireplaces, all placed at a cost of $6639, not including the labor, which was largely supplied by rangers and guards at odd moments. Campground needed improvements in addition to these are 15 water pipe systems, 226 latrines, 354 garbage cans, 248.99 acres of clearing, 552 tables, 504 fireplaces, at an estimated cost of $19,452. The sanitary features of these needed improvements will be partially taken care of by the $10,000 appropriation for campground fire protection and sanitation.

Buck's statistics on campground improvements and expenses does not include the biggest item of roads and trails which makes the camps accessible.

Calls Dimples Marks of Beauty. Is the dimple a mark of beauty? Or is it the maid with that bewitching birthmark and the Cupid's bow mouth less beautiful and intelligent than her sister without these attractions?

Dr. A. S. Warthin, eminent pathologist of the University of Michigan, says they bear a relationship to the harelip and the cleft palate which never yet in this or any other land have been accepted as beautiful. They mark a girl as "below par," says Doctor Warthin.

He said it during a lecture on "The Inheritance of Disease," in which he made a direct appeal for eugenics, better living conditions that should breed better humans, and a plea for the recognition of certain inheritances. He declares that the old proverb, "Blood will tell," has proven its truth throughout the ages and that today this fact was becoming recognized and that civilized people were at least considering what could be done to breed a better race.

"Rope of Rat Tails." A rope made of 3,000 gopher (ground squirrel) tails was recently on display at the office of the Montana extension director, awaiting shipment to the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture. The rope was made by the Blackfeet Indian chief Split-Ear, and his tribal assistants, who live near Browning, in Glacier county, Montana. The Indians have taken an active interest in the campaign against the rodents, and after burying more than 1,400 ground squirrels decided to save tails for the 14-foot rope now on exhibition. It is estimated that at least 15,000 rodents were destroyed by the Indians during the drive.

Canine Mixture. One day Billie chanced to stray in our yard, and upon seeing our dog he began to admire it. Finally he said: "Oh, we have a little dog at our place." Upon asking him what kind of a dog he had, he said: "Oh, ours is a mixture, three-quarters collie and four-fourths bull."—Exchange.

Meier Declares World Is Unready For Exposition

Julius L. Meier, commissioner of the Portland 1925 exposition, who has completed a globe-circling trip to invite the participation of foreign countries, returned home convinced that postponement of the fair project beyond the 1927 date fixed Friday is advisable. Mr. Meier believes the enterprise should await rehabilitation of Europe.

Mr. Meier left Portland confident and optimistic over the prospects for interesting the leading countries of the world in a great exposition in Portland in 1925. He confessed he returned a thorough pessimist as to that project under present conditions. He believes the time for waiting has come.

"The world is sick, with a high temperature," he said. "In my opinion, now is not the time to set a definite date for the party."

Changes made in the original plan of financing the exposition since he left Portland last February, were not approved by Mr. Meier. He said the state as a whole must participate if the fair is to be the unqualified success its original sponsors hoped for.

He believed it necessary for the state to supply a part of the exposition funds, either $1,000,000 or $2,000,000, and because this is not now contemplated, he found it necessary to withhold his support from the present exposition plans.

Leaves for San Diego— Miss Marjorie Coleman is leaving this evening for San Diego, where she will join her father. She has been making her home in the city for the past year, and leaves a great many friends who will miss her. When Criminals Were Branded. Up to the year 1829, all criminals in England were branded, as well as gypsies and vagabonds, but after that year only deserters from the army and soldiers who were notoriously bad characters were so marked.
