RAT "BARRACK" GOOD TRAP

Odd Idea Used by Irlshman Said to Have Had the Merit of Effectiveness.

A correspondent of the British Medical Journal has unearthed the following ingenious method of dealing with rats, which he found in Hall's book, to take our minds off of politics." "Ireland," published in 1841:

"Mr. Russel has a 'rat barrack' on his premises. It is about 12 feet long, 6 feet broad and 4 feet high, with a coping-stone on the top that projects a couple of feet inside the wall. The inside of the wall is full of holes that just admit a rat's body, leaving the tail outside. The whole is covered with old boards. There are two passages for them to come out into the yard, where they are fed and never disturbed. The consequence is they never go into his store where the bacon is.

"Once every three months he closes the holes that communicate with the are hanging out. A man goes in, takes them one by one by the tails and

Where Washington Wooed.

Yonkers, N. Y., has an interesting history. It is connected indirectly with the "sparking" days of George Washington, before he yielded to the charms of Widow Custis. Washington at one time paid very ardent court to one Mary Philipse. Her father, the Detroit News recalls, was one of the big landed proprietors of prerevolutionary times. His premises extended from what is now Philipse Manor station, three miles above Tarrytown, and close to Washington Irving's loved Sleepy Hollow, to what is now Getty square, in the heart of Yonkers.

The original manor house was at the former location. It is still standing, and a few years ago was bought and occupied by Elsie Janis, who has restored it to its early splendor and filled it with colonial furniture, much of which was there when Mary Philipse used to entertain the handsome young officer.

Use of the Time-Ball.

In the Middle ages the time-ball as a means of marking the passing hours was popular. For the convenience of the men and women of the various courts of Europe a great ball was dropped from the ceiling of the palace throne room at certain intervals. Today, many cities have timeballs in prominent places which drop at noon to warn the citizens of the time. Many harbors, Montreal and Quebec, for instance, still use the time-ball to mark noon and other

Why Insects Can Walk on Water. What makes it possible for the longlegged water flea to run right over the surface of a sheet of water? If we observe it closely, says "Science Siftings," we see that the end of each of its six long legs makes a slight depression where it rests upon the surface. The surface is elastic in fact and acts like a springy mattress. The physical basis of this mode of action may be explained as follows: The separate molecules of water cohere with considerable firmness and therefore offer a certain degree of resistance to penetration by any solid matter-but this is true only in case the body cannot be wet, i. e., if it has a composition like that of the fats. This resistance is a result of the surface tension of the liquid, which acts like a stretched membrane. This is sufficient to support the weight of the water flea, though it would be practi-
