THE PEOPLE'S FORUM

To the editor of the Tidings: Having just returned from Myrtle Creek, where we were visiting at the E. W. Redler home, I thought I'd tell you something of our trip. On going down, as we reached this end of Cow creek canyon, we met a dense fog, and we rode some time in a misty haze; then as the sun shone through the fog clouds arose to the hills, a picture of autumn beauty presented itself, such as one seldom sees. The Cow creek canyon and all the surrounding country is a blaze of autumn foliage at the present time. It seems that the red and yellow of the maples are so much more vivid this year than usual, and because of the dampness and fog the green foliage is a bright, spring-like green and forms a fine background for the autumn coloring. Douglas county, as usual, has been well blessed with rain, and the grass is nicely started. The prune crops around Roseburg and Myrtle Creek were good this year, and has been harvested without much loss of the fruit, which demands a good price. At Riddle, we noticed a signboard announcing to the public that "this is the best place on earth, just the place for a home," and so on, and near the placard was a dwelling with its roof mostly covered with moss. You see this often in Douglas county, but the moss in most cases grows in the ground and trees, and in the woods you often see a lovely carpet of moss, and every time you turn around, you find a new variety. The tree moss is so thick and long you can gather an armful in a few minutes, and if you desire covering for flower beds or a woody chair cushion, this is just the thing. Near Gold Hill, we noted a fellow digging potatoes (they were very small) and a Dutchman back of us said, "That fellow better quit digging and let them stay in another year and maybe they'd grow big enough."

Potatoes and vegetables of all varieties are grown in Douglas county, but the main product seems to be prunes, and the prune men keep their dryers running night and day. A government soil inspector said, "There is no place in the United States where the soil is better fitted for prunes than in Douglas county." MAY BENEDICT. River Moves Swiftly. The most rapid river of any size in the world is the Rhone in France, the current of which ranges as high as 40 miles an hour.
