Local and Personal

Movements of Fishes.

Remarkable investigations into the habits of fish are being carried out by the British ministry of fisheries. The object is to discover how far and in what direction fish travel; whether there are seasons in which organized migrations take place; and how fast research steamer has been fitted with tanks through which sea-water flows continuously. This vessel sets out from Lowestoft and small hauls are made at selected spots. The catch is shot into a tank, and the liveliest specimens are measured and marked.

After this they are put into a second tank, and all sickly fish are weeded
