What Constitutes Advertising
In order to allay a misunderstanding among some as to what constitutes news and what advertising, we print this very simple rule, which is used by newspapers to differentiate between them: "ALL future events, where an admission charge is made or a collection is taken IS ADVERTISING." This applies to organizations and societies of every kind as well as to individuals.

SOURCE OF TRUE HELP:—
My help cometh from the Lord,
Psalm 121: 2.

MERCY ON WHEELS
Next in importance to obtaining first aid treatment for an injured person is the necessity of getting him to a place where his injuries may be properly attended to.

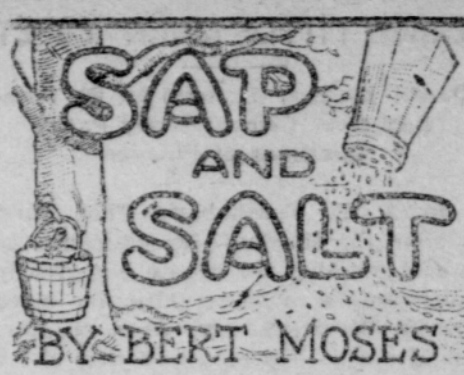

Ashland has the finest equipped hospital in southern Oregon, but in many instances this will prove worthless unless a person can be speedily brought to the building, where proper medical attention can be obtained.

While there are several men in the city who are able to afford giving an ambulance to the Community hospital, in as much as it is a community project, it was decided that every resident in the city should be given an opportunity to enter into the spirit of the affair and each contribute to the ambulance fund.

Unless everyone in a community is bathed in the community spirit, the community cannot thrive and produce the best results. Any enterprise that has many people interested in its welfare is bound to succeed.

At the Churches

Presbyterian Church
Subject for the morning sermon, "Jesus the Great Physician." The Women's Missionary society have their annual praise meeting at the time of the evening services.

Homelessness seems to be necessary in a woman to make her a good wife.

Success looks bigger while you are chasing it than it does after you catch it.

No one can be either great or right much more than a quarter of the time.

The real hustler hustles with his head, the activity of his body being purely incidental.

Those who work because they like it are better workmen than those who work because they have to.

You can afford to waste a lot of politeness because it doesn't cost anything to carry a complete assortment of it.

Figures in the New Jersey Double Murder Case

In the center are Mrs. Jane Gibson, who says she saw the murder of Rector Hall and Mrs. Mills' choir singer, near New Brunswick, N. J., and the mule she was riding at the time. At the right is James Mills, husband of the slain woman. At the left is the tree under which the bodies were found. It has been stripped of leaves, twigs and bark by morbid souvenir seekers.

Movieland Notes

"BRAWN OF THE NORTH"
One of the most remarkable screen productions featuring animals of the wild is being shown for the last time at the Vining theatre this evening. In connection with the filming of wolves, the masterful direction of the great dog actor starring in "Brawn of the North," stands out as one of the finest pieces of work ever seen by Ashland people.

"THE GOLD DIGGERS"
Playgoers of this city are at last to have an opportunity to see Avery Hopwood's comedy, "The Gold Diggers," of which much was heard during its two years' run at the Lyceum theatre, New York, and its run of a season at Powers' theatre, Chicago. As but one company has played the comedy on the American stage these long and successful runs have, up to the present season, prevented a road tour. The company is now embarked on a journey to the Pacific coast and will appear at the Vining theatre Friday, December 8.

EIGHT HOUR DAY RESUMED BY WEED LUMBER COMPANY

WEED, Calif., Dec. 2.—Notices were posted at the plant of the Weed Lumber company the first of the month which places the plant on an eight hour basis. The new wage scale was not specifically given, however, it was indicated that there would be some increase in the hourly rate, but a slight decrease in the daily scale. Last year, when the company went on a ten hour basis, the hourly rate was decreased. This change to ten hours precipitated a strike which lasted several weeks.

HAPPY EVENT FOR HERO

A gift of $10,000, an additional $3,500 life insurance policy and the paid-up mortgage on his little home at Fort Thomas, Ky., were presented to Sergt. Samuel Woodfill, named by General Pershing the outstanding hero of the World war, at the Palace theatre, New York city. The presentation was made by Judge Phillip McCook, a "buddy" in the army with Woodfill and came as a surprise to the latter, who was brought to New York upon pretense of participating in Armistice day celebrations. The gift constituted the contributions of employees of twenty-nine New York theatres. This photograph shows Sergeant and Mrs. Woodfill—all smiles—watching the burning of the mortgage on their home while Judge McCook supervises the deed.

Statue of Edmund Burke Unveiled

In furthering the policy of fostering friendship between English-speaking peoples, Sir Charles Wakefield, former lord mayor of London, in behalf of the Sulgrave Institute of Great Britain, presented to the United States a statue of Edmund Burke, the famous British statesman who held out for a conciliatory attitude toward the American colonies. Secretary of War Weeks accepted the statue on behalf of the United States. The photograph shows the unveiling in Washington.

WORKED UP OVER TITLES

Britisher Tells of Tribulations He Suffered at the Hands of Inquiring American Lady.

I was quite exhausted the other evening when I had been properly cross-examined by an information-hungry young American lady about why a duke and an archbishop were called "your grace," why marquises, earls, viscounts and barons were all lumped together as "noble lords," why it was that the daughter of a baron was called "the Honorable Cynthia Brown," whereas if she were the daughter of the earl of Twickenham she would be the Lady Cynthia Brown, and what were courtesy titles anyway, and why should Lord Robert Cecil be just like a commoner whereas his elder brother, the marquis of Salisbury, was a real lord, so that a lord was not a real lord unless he sat in the house of lords; and why the eldest son takes the second title of his father so that the son of the duke of Devonshire is called the marquis of Hartington, and as they are all Ladies how is it possible to tell the difference between the wife of a baronet and his wife, or even the daughter, of an earl; and, of course, she knew it was not correct to call a lord a lord in his presence if you knew him quite well as "Jimmy," or "Toddlies," or anything, except when introducing somebody to him or at a public meeting, when you came out strong with "His grace, the duke of Peebles," but otherwise at golf you would call him "old thing" to show you liked him; and wasn't it really an awful nuisance to have precedence so as to be quite sure you didn't go in to dinner before somebody else, and was it true—oh, dear, dear, dear.—Sir John Foster Fraser in Arts and Decoration.

How Wonderful is Man!
Man's a curious animal. He'll hear a little knock in his four-cylinder motor and beat it to the service station to find out what's wrong. But let his own throat get sore or his own pipes become wheezy and he'll go right on leaving them to get well the best way they may.—Exchange.

CARRIES MUSIC MANY MILES

Horn Said to Have Transmitted Sounds Distinctly for a Most Remarkable Distance.

A length of 25 feet and an opening of 12 feet square are the measurements of the world's largest horn for broadcasting music received by radio. This giant horn is in successful daily operation at Idora park, a public amusement resort in California. The broadcasting capacity of this huge instrument is sufficient to carry radio music throughout an area of approximately 29 square miles. In addition to the general interest in its sheer size and amplifying range, it is of absorbing importance to the radio expert because of the fact that, through the use of its electro-dynamic reproducer, such true tones have been produced as to eliminate what is technically known as "distortion."

One thousand feet of clear airplane spruce lumber went into the construction of this horn. The engineers who built it were confronted with difficulties of design and erection, owing to its giant size. It is equipped with a late type of radio reproducer and power amplifier.

EVEREST TOP STILL UNTROD

But British Explorers in Recent Attempt Got to Height Never Previously Attained.

The highest point above sea level ever reached by a human being afoot, 27,300 feet, was attained, with the aid of oxygen-breathing apparatus, by two members of the Mount Everest expedition at noon, the 27th of last May, says Henry S. White in the Popular Mechanics Magazine. This brought the explorers within 1,702 feet of the summit, the highest point on the earth's surface. The final attempt was to have been made June 6, but the monsoon broke June 3, definitely frustrating any further efforts for this year at least. When the monsoon breaks on Mount Everest, there is no alternative but to get off the mountain as soon as possible.

It has now been definitely proved that the mountain itself at the highest points reached is not difficult to climb, and the two explorers who came so near to reaching the actual summit were able to proceed along the north face without ropes. The one and only obstacle that made the summit unattainable was the bad weather, and with the monsoon left out, it is certain that the summit will be reached at the next attempt. The two explorers who reached this highest point were Capt. Geoffrey Bruce, one of the leaders of the expedition, and George Finch, a scientist attached to it.

Rough Men and Robins.

A few days ago a car inspector, looking over a coal train at Arkville, N. Y., discovered a bird's nest on the top of a journal box of an empty car. Investigation disclosed two baby robins in the nest. The orphan birds at once became the center of attraction for the yard men and the various train crews. It was quite evident the young robins needed parents. In an effort to find the home of the young travelers it was learned that the empty car had been picked up at West Davenport, 54 miles distant. A delegation of switchmen, yardmen, trainmen and other interested persons immediately waited on the division superintendent. The car was hooked on to an engine and taken back to West Davenport, where it was spotted in the railroad yard at the exact place from which it had been taken. The frantic mother bird found her little ones and everybody was happy.
