Correction

In a recent article in the Tidings, it was stated that the farmers of the Bellevue district had organized a community unit of the farm bureau. This should have been made to have read the farmers of the Valleyview district, which lies to the north and west of the city, instead of the Bellevue district, which is toward the east and south.

Damon and Pythias Found on Broadway

HARRY TIERNEY JOSEPH MCCARTHY Home Sweet Home, We'll call it Journey's End.

Playwrights Have Life-Long Friendship

Too many cooks, paradoxically enough, spoiled a couple of houses for Joseph McCarthy and Harry Tierney, but also gave them a snug fortune.

The story begins with two fat royalty checks received by McCarthy and Tierney for the writing of "Irene," a musical comedy which beat all records on Broadway. These two, known as the Damon and Pythias of Broadway, have done everything together since their measles and mumps days in New England, so they looked at the checks, then at each other and had a simultaneous inspiration to build a new house.

FAMILIES INTERFERE

At that time, they thought there was nothing to it but inspiration. Afterward, when they discovered that every member of their large families had something to say about how the houses ought to be built, they weren't so sure. Uncles, aunts, cousins and in-laws came to watch the building progress and remained to advise. In the strain of pleasing all the kin, McCarthy and Tierney declare they almost wished they'd never had those checks. And the houses, while they might have suited the relatives, were spoiled for their owners by "too many cooks."

WILLIAM A. BRADY So in London when William A. Brady, impressed by "Irene," offered the friends any show he owned for a musical comedy, they seized upon "Too Many Cooks" in which a young man was hampered in his house-building venture just as they were by too many cooks and too much advice.

They called the musical version, which bids fair to be more profitable for them even than "Irene," "Up She Goes" and included in its score "Journey's End," for a theme song and "Lady Luck," an enchanting fox-trot, both composed during their own home-building days.

Among other distinguished honors that have come to "Up She Goes" is that of being the first musical comedy invited to play in Mr. Brady's artistic "Playhouse."

Sign of Opulence.

Different individuals have different ambitions. Probably one of the most unique is that of a wife of a friend of mine who has been an earnest help-mate of her husband for a number of years. She has helped him climb the ladder of fame and moderate fortune. In talking about her pet desire the other day, he said: "What do you think Molly wants to do when the bank account amounts to a certain figure? She wants to have money enough to have a town house, so that she can board it up during the summer. I have often noticed, when in New York, that the very rich board up their houses during the summer. This is her idea of letting the rest of the world know you are opulent."—Washington Star.

Chance.

When Camille Flammarion was five years old, he saw an eclipse of the sun reflected in a bucket of water. That aroused his interest in the stars. Today he is a celebrated French astronomer. Flammarion suggests that he might have followed some other line of work, if chance had not led him to the water pail.

Chance—the possibility of the unexpected happening at any moment—is what makes life interesting. The laws of chance have a lot to do with our careers. Many successful men are creations of chance, or luck, though they try to pin it on hard work and not watching the clock.

His Comment.

"Land o' Goshen!" astoundedly ejaculated Mrs. Johnson, in the midst of her reading. "Listen here, Gap: It says that in parts of the West Indies they use crabs for watch dogs. These pertickler crabs are about the size of footballs, and have enormous eyes and feelers."

"Huh!" snorted Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge. "I don't want to live in no West Indies, wherever they're at. I'd look pretty, wouldn't I, going to town and trading around with ten or a dozen goggle-eyed crabs the size of footballs scrambling along after me?" Kansas City Star.

Wine Back on Old Job

The lure of the rail proved too strong for Burton Wine, O. A. C. football star, who is spending his vacation in the city. In order to keep in condition for athletics, Wine has returned to his old job of firing a locomotive for the Southern Pacific company. He obtained a leave of absence from the railroad in order to attend the Corvallis college, where he is majoring in mechanical engineering.

Portuguese Women Good Porters.

The porters of Portugal are women who carry great burdens upon their heads. It is a common thing for one of these Amazons to carry a filled steamer trunk on her head from the ship landing to the hotel, a distance of a mile and mostly up a steep hill. Every conceivable kind of load is carried in this way. Peasant women will carry a closed umbrella neatly balanced on their heads. I once saw a woman coming into market, says a recent traveler, with a sleeping infant in a small round basket on her head, one hand holding the basket and the other an umbrella to shield off the strong rays of the sun.—Philadelphia Record.

EMOTION AND THE APPETITE

Old Theory That People in Love Are Seldom Hungry Has Been Pretty Well Exploded.

The theory that young men and women in love lose their appetites has for good and all been exploded.

The newly engaged pair who preferred to spend the quiet darkening hours of dinner time on the lawn rather than partake of the meal in general company was the most prominent example that led up to the belief that lovers found food unnecessary.

Now, however, doctors have proved that any emotion that creates pleasure, as love and hope, tends to stimulate the action of the heart and other organs.

A more brisk circulation occurs, producing healthy appetite.

On the other hand, it stands to reason that opposite emotions are liable to impede the action of the heart. Thus, fear, grief and despair put the brake on the working of the digestive organs.

The emotion produced by fear enfeebles the muscular and nervous systems, sometimes to such an extent that indigestion may set in for seemingly no reason at all.

So, before allowing yourself to get angry, remember the injurious after-effects.

Right Way to Breathe. The fundamental of health—also of beauty—is proper breathing. Most people don't bring the remote cells of the lungs into use. Reducing 33% respirations to ten per minute for five consecutive minutes three times a day will insure full breathing. For instance, as you are walking, instead of breathing as you ordinarily do, make ten complete respirations per minute (ten inhalations and ten exhalations). In other words, you breathe in for three seconds and out for three seconds, making a complete respiration every six seconds, at which rate your respiration will be at the rate of ten per minute. To simplify, make 50 complete respirations last you for five minutes. At the end of five minutes you will find that you will be breathing deeply and filling your lungs to capacity. This is simply an exercise, and three or four times a day will be found sufficient, according to a DeLineator writer.
