CHAPTER XIII TO HAZARDOUS HEIGHTS

Henry Mallinson was having an exciting time of it in the control room. With Ruth Ranger and the reporter in the mine shaft, and with fire destroying the treasure at the bottom of the shaft, Mallinson was in a frenzy.

"Are those levers working over there?" he shouted to the control man. The answer came in the affirmative. "Then turn 'em on and flood the passages!" he shouted.

Ruth and Dick Foster were indeed in a precarious predicament. The elevator was rapidly reaching the top of the shaft, and threatened to crush both of them. Suddenly Foster whipped out his revolver and began shooting holes in the planks in the top of the elevator. He succeeded in gradually smashing his way through into the inside, where he managed to grasp the lever and start the elevator downward.

In the underground passage, Foster began to tell Ruth of his discoveries. "Mallinson is behind the scenes," he finished, "and in that control room they've got all kinds of devilish contrivances. They kept me a prisoner for a week, but I got this map of the whole layout for my trouble."

After looking the map over the girl decided she would explore the place at once. "I've gone too far to turn back now," she declared. "I'm going to solve this mystery before I leave Haunted Valley."

Meanwhile, Vivian Delamar was worrying herself sick over the disappearance of Mallinson. She finally decided to visit his home and see if she could learn anything there. Upon her arrival, she found Mallinson's servant burning a lot of papers in the fireplace in the library.

"Mr. Mallinson telephoned me and asked me to destroy all these papers before the police can make a search," he explained. "Mr. Mallinson is at his headquarters in Haunted Valley, and he is badly wounded."

Vivian was startled at the news that the man she loved was injured. She determined to get a doctor and hurry to the control room. As the girl was about to leave the house, she encountered Eugene Craig, about to enter.

"Where is Mallinson?" he asked. "I have an account to settle with him."

Vivian saw she must act quickly. "If you have anything important to take up with Mr. Mallinson," she said, "I know he will be glad to see you. Just a moment and I will tell him you are here."

Craig seated himself as Vivian Delamar walked into the next room. But the young lady didn't believe in wasting any time. She walked through the library, picked up her things and hurried for the side door of the house.

Now it so happened that the suspicious and ever-wakeful Denny had observed all that had been going on in Mallinson's home. When Vivian left, Denny followed, and when Vivian started for Haunted Valley with the doctor, Denny succeeded in climbing onto the rear of the automobile and enjoying the ride to the same spot.

Mallinson was giving final orders in the control room when Vivian and the doctor arrived. Denny had sprung from the rear of the car and had hidden in some brush before the car had stopped. The youngster wondered whether he should follow the doctor, or whether he should wait outside for developments. He suddenly made up his mind, for he beheld a stranger furtively picking his way through the valley, only a short distance away. Denny hoped that by following the man, he would find some clue to the whole mysterious business surrounding Ruth.

Meanwhile, Ruth and Foster had wended their way through the maze of underground passages in the valley. The place seemed unusually spooky, and both had the feeling that a third person was somewhere near them, watching every move they made. A noise behind them caused them both to wheel around, and their eyes fell upon a chest that they had not observed before.

Foster hurried to open it, but the chest was tightly bolted and the cover could not be budged. Ruth's flashlight fell on some papers on the floor. The girl grasped quickly for them, but before she could lay her hands on them they were quickly snatched away. Ruth grappled with the man and Foster made a flying tackle, but the stranger eluded them both and scurried off into the darkness. Fortunately, Ruth did not get a look at his face—for it was Eugene Craig. Dick wanted to pursue the man, but the girl was more interested just then in the papers which he had left lying on the floor.

Under the light of her flashlight, Ruth discovered that the papers were very old parchments, and written in ancient Spanish script. "With that old chest back there and these papers, we may discover the secret of Haunted Valley," the girl ventured. But when they returned to the chest it had mysteriously disappeared from sight.

Meanwhile, in the control room, Mallinson's men chanced to look through the radio periscope and see an old prospector scurrying through the valley with a chest in his arms. The control man gave an order and a terrific explosion was the result. When the smoke in the valley had cleared the prospector had disappeared from sight.

But in the underground passage, the explosion had startled Ruth and her companion, and perhaps more so when they heard footsteps running in their direction. The owner of all the noise was Denny, who had become lost in the labyrinth of passages and had just chanced to run into the arms of Ruth when the noise of the explosion had frightened him to death.

"I followed some old prospector in here," Denny explained, "scampering hard, and maybe he's the one who got away with the chest." Denny was unanimously chosen guide to lead the two explorers through the passageway and out to daylight.

Soon the three emerged from the dark passageway, and for a moment the light of the sun almost blinded them. In a moment they had recovered and Ruth cast her eyes about the place.

"Look!" Foster exclaimed suddenly. "There's something funny going on over there!"

Ruth and Denny looked in the direction that Foster indicated and saw Vivian Delamar and a man carrying a small kit—evidently a doctor's—emerging from a cabin.

"That must be the cabin where Miss Delamar and the doctor have been taking care of Mallinson," Denny exclaimed.

"All right! Let's go!" Foster added enthusiastically.

But Henry Mallinson was still extremely alert. With his arm bandaged, he saw the trio approaching. Drawing hastily back from the window, he decided to skip. Running from the cabin, he hurried toward some ladders on the face of the cliff and started climbing upwards.

Ruth, Dick Foster and Denny saw him nearing the top, and followed hot on his trail. As they started climbing the ladder, Mallinson reached the top. Here he was suddenly blocked by the man of mystery, who sprang out at him. The struggle was very brief, as Mallinson employed a trick, managing to floor his attacker and escape.

The mystery may struggle to his feet and was about to pursue Mallinson when he heard voices coming from below. Peering over the top of the cliff, he saw Ruth Ranger rapidly climbing up the ladder. A sneeze escaped his lips and he hastened to dislodge the fastenings of the ladder at the top. He was not aware that it was secured firmly at the bottom.

to the Lowest Bidder?

THE printer has lost much in the past because of his mistakes in business judgment, but his customers have lost far more in failure to turn his skill to their advantage. Business men can get vastly more out of a printer than a low bid, and it is reasonably certain that they can get less from the lowest bidder than even the low price calls for; because while he may find it necessary to sell his product at a low price, his dilemma forces him to strike as hard a bargain in delivery as his customer does in buying.

Choose a good printer; he can help you build a better business if you will let him.
