A GOOD WAY TO UPSET PRICES

Further Exposures of How Edison-Ford Money Plan Would Fail to Aid Farmer.

The way the Edison-Ford "commodity money" scheme, aimed to stabilize monetary values, would have exactly the opposite effect, is discussed in the present article, which is the second in a series prepared by the American Bankers Association, reviewing the exposure of the weaknesses of the plan as presented by William T. Foster, Director of the Pollack Foundation for Economic Research.

Briefly stated, the Edison-Ford plan provides for Government warehousing of basic commodities, against which currency would be loaned to the producer without interest, up to half the average value of the products for the previous twenty-five years. This currency would be cancelled as the commodities were withdrawn and passed into trade. On the other half of the value the producer would receive "equity certificates" which he could sell or use for bank loans. On these points Mr. Foster says:

Upsetting Price Equilibrium "Steady price levels depend mainly on the balance between the volume of goods on the market and the volume of money offered for goods. The Edison plan is designed expressly to upset the balance. A farmer delivers, say, two thousand bushels of wheat to the Government warehouse and the Government delivers one thousand dollars in new money to the farmer. When the farmer sells the wheat he repays the loan and the Government destroys the money. Thus the volume of money is increased precisely when goods are stored; and the volume of money is decreased precisely when these goods are marketed. In other words, each transaction begins by placing in circulation goods without money to match the goods. Dollar demand is created as the supply of goods is withdrawn; demand is withdrawn.

"Would it enable the farmer to borrow more money on his products than he can borrow now? When Mr. Edison contends that farmers would obtain larger loans on their crops than they can now obtain from the banks, he is contented by this dilemma: Either the banks are now refusing to make sound loans, or, under the Edison plan, the Government would make unsound loans. "Neither Mr. Edison nor Mr. Ford can consistently contend that banks now refuse to make sound loans, for that is the way banks make most of their profits, and Mr. Edison and Mr. Ford have no doubt that banks are conducted for profit. It follows that the plan would yield larger loans to farmers only if the Government met the risks of unsound banking. In that case all insolvent borrowers gained would be paid by the rest of the population, which, to say the least, is not a fair deal. Cutting Down Farm Credit "Apparently, however, the Government is not expected to run many risks, for the farmer is allowed to borrow an amount no greater than one-half the average value of his product for the previous twenty-five years. But prices have risen so high since 1896 that the farmer could borrow on most products much less than half the present value of the products. It would be much less, therefore, than the farmer could borrow directly from the banks on graded products. Government loans would be made, for there would be no way of determining the twenty-five year price average. "However, the farmer, having obtained the stipulated Government loan on his goods, could then offer his equity certificate to a bank for an additional loan. But the equity certificate is virtually a second mortgage, and no bank would give a second mortgage to a first mortgagee. "Suppose the Old National Bank was willing to lend a farmer eight hundred dollars on one thousand bushels of wheat. Suppose, however, the farmer deposited the wheat in a Federal warehouse and obtained five hundred dollars from the Government. Certainly the bank would not lend the farmer three hundred dollars on the equity certificate. The protection of the bank would be greater if the farmer relied on the bank for the entire loan; for in that case the bank could realize on its security without being obliged to pay five hundred dollars to get the wheat out of Government storage. The farmer can now borrow more money from a bank on standardized farm products than under the Edison plan."

Bosco Was Supposed to Feel Miserable

Daily News Letter

LONDON, July 7.—While the pre-convention political pot boils in America it has a few bubbles in London. Fred Upham, treasurer of the Republican National Committee; Ambassador Moore and Hiram Johnson met in London to talk things over. No one knows what was said, no one even knows whether politics came under discussion, but it's a safe guess that Upham and Moore have some sort of a line on Johnson's plans, which they can report to President Harding. It was all unplanned this meeting—so they say—but it may have added to the confused political situation in the States, particularly if Senator Johnson refused to discuss his present attitude towards President Harding's world court. Aside from this little Republican pow-wow London has been entertaining a potential Democratic Presidential candidate in Senator Underwood, of Alabama. The Senator claimed to be in London in order that he might rest and keep out of the turmoil and struggle of pre-convention summers. London is oblivious to all this and the London newspapers insist upon interviewing Senator Johnson on his views of English country life. Incidentally this is about the only subject that the Senator is easily interviewed on. The only interest London seems to have in the forthcoming election is the position of Henry Ford. President Harding's world court issue hasn't caused a ripple here. The English have almost given up hopes of ever getting America into European affairs. Henry Ford, however, excites the English interest, because of his peace ship venture and more particularly because of his cars. Ford has long been anxious to become a business man in England—he has been desirous of building a large plant at Southampton—but for many and devious reasons there have always been obstacles placed in his way when he has sought to establish large-scale factories. Dudley Field Malone received three loud cheers from American correspondents when he told the American Society in London that "friendship between the United States and England should be assumed and those who are trying to prove it by propaganda should be restrained." Malone was cheered because he struck a sympathetic note with the correspondents. The official "hands-across-the-sea" season is well under way. Hardly a day passes save to listen to long-winded speeches about "the ties that bind the two great English-speaking nations." Correspondents are perhaps a little cynical, but they are skeptical about these "ties," and certainly are tired of hearing about them from professional handshakers who bear no weight either in America or England.

Stanley Baldwin, Prime Minister of Great Britain, is enamored of America. He has confided to friends that he is anxious to visit America again, and may do it when his term of Prime Minister is up.

Coach Hughes of the local high school is anxiously awaiting the arrival of his train, who he expects on the train this evening. Mrs. Hughes is coming from Colorado to visit her son, who she has not seen for several years.
