"Haunted Valley"

CHAPTER XIV IN DESPERATE FLIGHT

Fortunately Ruth Ranger was not seriously injured by her fall. Dick Foster and Dinny carried her into the cabin and a few moments the girl was quite herself again.

"We won't know where to look for Mallinson now," she lamented, "and without direct orders from him, those men in the control room will destroy any person entering the valley."

Just then the door opened and two mysterious gentlemen appeared with Mallinson—their prisoner. "Why, what does this mean?" Ruth ejaculated.

"Mallinson was a good bluffer. 'I should like to know myself,' he answered. 'You will have to ask these gentlemen.'"

"It means that we are going to have a show down right now," one of his captors replied. "We are just as deeply interested in Haunted Valley as Miss Ranger, and now we've got things the way we want them."

"It will be a relief to solve this mystery," Ruth answered. "I had the secret within my grasp in an underground tunnel, but I lost the papers—"

"I take it that none of you know the secret," smiled Mallinson, serenely. "Also, Ruth, you have forgotten that Haunted Valley has been forfeited to me. Why don't you ask Mr. Craig," he sneered, "the meaning of everything?"

The party then decided the best thing to do would be to go to the control room. With Mallinson in their safety would be guaranteed.

They were about to leave when a trap door in the floor opened and an old man of Spanish mien appeared. The lost papers were in his hands.

"Why! Who are you?" Ruth exclaimed.

"Ah, I have the most wonderful old documents," the Spaniard replied. "They are written in the Spanish of three centuries ago!"

"Can you read them?" one of Mallinson's captors asked excitedly. "Most certainly," came the suave reply. "They constitute the record of the Imperial Expedition which left Mexico City in 1542 in search of the Seven Golden Cities! It is all here—how they suffered and fought and died!"

"But what—what did they find?" queried Ruth.

"They found—ah, but I must not get ahead of my story," replied the old man, much to the relief of Mallinson. "But what an addition to the documentary history of that period!" he continued, ecstatically. "And here is a paper of a later day, in 1745, when the language was beginning to lose its purity!"

At this point Mallinson became alarmed. He knew the man was coming to the secret. Stealthily, he reached for the telephone and called to his men in the control room: "Number twenty-four! Quick!"

An explosion immediately there was an explosion below the trap door in the cabin, and in the confusion, Mallinson seized the papers from the table, rushed out of the place, jumped on a horse and galloped away, while the others were pulling themselves out of the ruins. Ruth and Dick Foster recovered themselves first, and running toward the remaining two horses they lost no time in taking up the pursuit.

"The two men in the control room watched the flight of the three riders across the valley. A number of levers were pulled, causing explosions, but Mallinson's men had not yet succeeded in getting the right range. Other levers were drawn back, bringing the upheavals of dirt closer to Ruth and her companion.

"Throw up your hands—the whole gang of you!"

The men in the control room whirled about in surprise and beheld Eugene Craig standing behind them, an automatic in each hand. The young man had arrived on the scene in the nick of time, for in another moment Ruth would have been blown to atoms.

Mallinson's horse was foaming and covered with sweat, and the fleeing man knew that it could not

PATTI HARROLD
Old Home Songs in Bright Light Clubs Make Even Cops Forget to Raid
New York City.—No matter how censored the New Yorker becomes, a little spark of country will make him kin to his neighbor.
This is being proved on the star-spangled white way where every night at the supper clubs and midnight rendezvous haunts, fashionable night owls lustily yell the choruses of "Saw Mill River Road" as the million dollar orchestras play the old-fashioned tune.
Patti Harrold, herself a pretty country product, started all the reminiscence craze with the lyrics she sings in "Glory":
Down there—in lov-er's lane—
And it just proves," Miss Harrold adds softly, "that romance isn't dead, only covered up with frivolity. Underneath, New York is all sentiment."

to the Lowest Bidder?
THE printer has lost much in the past because of his mistakes in business judgment, but his customers have lost far more in failure to turn his skill to their advantage. Business men can get vastly more out of a printer than a low bid, and it is reasonably certain that they can get less from the lowest bidder than even the low price calls for; because while he may find it necessary to sell his product at a low price, his dilemma forces him to strike as hard a bargain in delivery as his customer does in buying.
Choose a good printer; he can help you build a better business if you will let him.
