NEW $30,000 BRIDGE AT FALLS RIVER DONE

REDDING, Cal., July 10.—The county's new $33,000 bridge across Pit River at Fall River Mills cannot be used until the fills at each end are put in. The supervisors opened bids for the fills last Wednesday, but the price was considered too high and the contract was not let.

According to the bids offered the fills will cost about half as much as the bridge. Further consideration will be given tomorrow to the problem.

Back To Mines—T. M. Anderson, who owns a number of mining claims west of town, left today for his property to resume development work. He is working seven claims about six miles west of town.

CHAPTER XV
DISPUTED TREASURE

The roar of the locomotive was coming closer and closer to the prostrate form of Ruth Ranger. Then suddenly the aviator revived himself and saw the puffing monster bearing down toward his wrecked plane. His eyes next fell on the girl, and with a mighty effort he dragged Ruth and himself from the track.

But the motor of the plane was wedged between the rails and as the engine crashed into it, it was dented from the track and plunged into the man of mystery.

When the smoke had cleared, Ruth and the aviator rushed down the embankment. Mallinson had disappeared, but the man of mystery was lying inert—dead. Ruth rolled him over and beheld the face of Denslow. As she recoiled in horror, the aviator discovered some papers nearby which the girl recognized as important documents concerning the valley.

At that moment the young newspaper reporter, Dick Foster, appeared on the scene and offered to guide Ruth back to the secret headquarters of Mallinson in Haunted Valley. The girl supposed that her enemy had also been killed with Denslow, but at that moment Mallinson was actually making new plans to outfit Ruth.

Meanwhile Eugene Craig had taken full charge of the control room. After disconnecting all the menacing devices, he turned his two prisoners over to his mysterious colleagues. Denny was the next one to appear in the control room, and with Denny he looked the place over from beginning to end. While they were making their examination, Craig suddenly came upon some papers which seemed to interest and excite him. He said nothing about them but quickly trust them in his pocket.

"Mr. Craig, take a look at this!" Young Craig turned and saw Denny peering through the periscope affair. Glancing through the glass, he beheld Ruth and Foster riding through the valley, and Mallinson and Vivian Delamar coming from another direction. Craig's first thought was that Ruth was in danger, and he ran from the place to head off Mallinson.

But Ruth and Foster reached the control room in safety and both greeted Denny warmly. Ruth was amazed at the place and looked around with keen interest, while Denny enthusiastically showed her the periscope, but as Ruth gazed through, an exclamation of surprise escaped her lips. She saw Craig in the valley, approaching Mallinson and holding some papers before her enemy. The girl was upset at the apparent proof of the complicity of the man she loved.

Her attention was directed from the periscope to the old Spaniard, who was struggling under the weight of a heavy chest. Then, turning to Ruth, he asked to see the papers she had recovered.

"This means," he said, "that the underground river channels of this valley contain the richest single treasure in the world. You know, four centuries ago, Spanish expeditions came here looking for silver, but after analyzing the samples, discovered them to be quite worthless. Two hundred years later, another expedition came, but a cave-in killed all but one man. He returned with the tale of vast deposits of rich ore deposited in the labyrinth of here."

Guiding them into a passage filled with stone, he continued: "There are miles of these passages, and most of them are nearly full of the most precious metal we know—platinum."

"You'll have to excuse me!" Dick exploded. "I'm going to hurry back to my paper! This is the greatest story of the age, and nobody's going to beat me to it!"

presented her with a little volume in which to record her experiences.

Those present for the jolly little farewell with the one going away were: Katherine Pittinger, Aileen Nutter, Margaret McNabb, Helen Detrick, Virginia Frost, Ramona and Rosalind Wise and the guest honored Florence Wilson. Miss Lennart and Mrs. Andrews enjoyed the jollity of the merry little party with them.

"Rainbow Class" Party—Saturday evening, the "Rainbow Class" of the senior department of the Presbyterian Sunday school surprised one of their number, Miss Florence Wilson, who leaves with her parents very shortly for their eastern trip, at the home of the teacher, Mrs. H. W. Andrews, 122 Church St.

All of the members of the class not away on their vacations, were present and a few close friends of Miss Wilson's, not members of this class. Miss Lennart had graciously consented to read the palms of the little company and a great deal of pleasure and interest centered about this, the chief feature of the evening's entertainment.

Miss Lennart's skill in palmistry is well known and the class appreciated very much her giving the hours for their pleasure.

Light refreshments were served later in the evening and here again the girls had a joyous hour over the predictions from the tea-cups. The girls decided that Florence must keep strict account of her year exact, so they presented her with a little volume in which to record her experiences.

Those present for the jolly little farewell with the one going away were: Katherine Pittinger, Aileen Nutter, Margaret McNabb, Helen Detrick, Virginia Frost, Ramona and Rosalind Wise and the guest honored Florence Wilson. Miss Lennart and Mrs. Andrews enjoyed the jollity of the merry little party with them.
