RHEUMATISM LEAVES YOU FOREVER

Deep Seated Uric Acid Deposits Are Dissolved and the Rheumatic Poison Starts to Leave the System Within Twenty-four Hours.

Every Druggist in this country is authorized to say to every rheumatic sufferer that if a full pint bottle of Allenru, the sure conqueror of rheumatism, does not reduce swollen joints and do away with even the slightest twinge of rheumatic pain, he will gladly return your money without comment.

Allenru has been tried and tested for years, and really marvelous results have been accomplished in the most severe cases where the suffering and agony was intense and piteous and where the patient was helpless.

Mr. James H. Allen, the discoverer of Allenru, who for many years suffered the torments of acute rheumatism, desires all sufferers to know that he does not want a cent of anyone's money unless Allenru decisively conquers this worst of all diseases, and he has instructed druggists to guarantee it as above in every instance. (East Side Pharmacy can supply you.)

"PLUNDER"

By HERBERT CROOKER Adapted from the Patheserial by Bertram Millhauser

Pearl Travers rushed madly into her Madison Avenue mansion, leaving her battleship-grey roadster standing unattended at the curb. She had an appointment at her home with an unknown gentleman for two o'clock, and it was already one-thirty.

The beautiful girl's cheeks were glowing with excitement, and her eyes danced as she hastily prepared to change her dress for a more becoming afternoon frock. Only one thing could account for the breathless exuberance of the girl—she had just experienced the thrill of her life!

Pearl Travers was a combination of Cleopatra and Joan of Arc, with a generous mixture of the typical, adventure-loving American girl. She possessed wealth in abundance and radiant beauty; and the only thing she really craved was—The Thrill!

That morning as Pearl was driving slowly past the Pennsylvania station, her quick eye had detected a theft being committed. It evidently had been carefully planned, as the robber sprung with his loot into an awaiting taxi-cab and eluded his pursuers in the confusion. The girl, however, had taken up the chase—a chase over the slippery pavements of New York—through crowded streets—under elevated railroads—arriving at a small building near the East River.

Fearlessly, Pearl crashed with her car through the door of the building and ran down the surprised thief before he could make a further escape. Before he could overpower her, the police arrived, but the girl had already succeeded in wresting the loot from his hand. At that moment a suave looking individual had appeared on the scene—the victim of the theft. He thanked the girl and showed her the contents of the black bag—two enormous diamonds. Pearl declined any form of reward, and the thrill of the chase had been sufficient for her—and after receiving the thanks of the grateful gentleman she had departed.

Pearl was just putting the finishing touches on her toilet when the maid announced her expected caller—a gentleman by the name of Jude Deering. Hurrying to the living room, she stopped in astonishment, as Deering was no other than the victim of the theft that morning.

"Why! Imagine my appointment being with you!" she exclaimed. "And neither of us knowing it this morning! It looks as though you were cut out to furnish me with thrills!"

A quick sympathy sprung up between the two, founded on the recent excitement, and then Deering stated his business. He understood that Miss Travers owned certain stock in the old Central Building in lower New York. He desired to purchase it.

"My reasons," he explained, "are purely personal. I am offering you a very fair price." Pearl thought for a moment, then: "Fair!" she smiled. "Why—plain charity! I have no objection to selling at such a profit. Just a moment and I'll hunt it up."

Deering's pleasant manner suddenly changed. "Listen, my dear young lady," he said, "be careful! You're playing with fire! Keep out of this! If you value your life—keep out!"

"Good!" the girl returned. "I can't fire! I'm going to get to the bottom of this affair, and it's your wish against mine!"

Jude Deering left the Travers household in a rage. He could not understand the sudden change of the girl. But the stock—she had terminated to secure it in one way or another. He hailed a cab and began to formulate a plan as he approached Forty-second Street.

And the affair did, as the mysterious young man had said, involve millions. Jude Deering was playing a bold game—a game which had almost cost a life. For entirely by accident he stumbled into the sure of fabulous down understanding the sudden change of the girl. But the stock—she had terminated to secure it in one way or another. He hailed a cab and began to formulate a plan as he approached Forty-second Street.
