CHAPTER VI HEIGHTS OF HAZARD

Pearl Travers, standing with Mrs. de Lissa in front of the latter's home, was extremely surprised to see her enemy, Jude Deering, suddenly turn about, get into his motor and drive off without striking a blow. A third watcher was the young gentleman who went by the doubtful name of "Mr. Jones."

From behind a tree he watched the strange proceedings with an enigmatic smile. But as Deering's car slowly turned the corner, "Jones" raced after it and succeeded in climbing onto the tire rim on the rear of the car.

Pearl, delighted with the fact that she was now in possession of twenty more shares of Central Building stock, said goodbye to Mrs. de Lissa and started down the road on her motorcycle. Her heart sang with joy as she whizzed along the narrow country road, but conflicting thoughts entered her mind—thoughts of the real identity of one "Mr. Jones."

Then, as she neared the spot where an aeration system had recently been completed, she was forced to slow down and stop, for a motorcar was parked across the road. Pearl dismounted and started to lean her motor cycle around the car. Suddenly a figure appeared from behind a clump of bushes.

"I'll take those stock certificates, please," said Deering, a crafty smile playing over his face.

Pearl stopped short and gazed in astonishment. As Deering approached, threateningly, the girl drew back then pretended to reach in the bosom of her frock for the papers, but instead she quickly turned and ran.

Deering was after her in a second. A struggle was about to ensue when another figure appeared—"Mr. Jones." With a short blow, he knocked Deering into the brush, but his opponent quickly staggered to his feet and came back to meet the attack. Both men rushed each other, clinched, and in the exchange of blows they found themselves on a small cliff over the water.

Pearl shouted to her champion to end the fight, but her words were frozen on her lips, as both men suddenly toppled over the cliff into the water. The current was carrying them along, and suddenly noting a large pipe that drew a tremendous current of water, the girl cried out a warning. But it was too late!

Deering, who was with the mysterious young man, and the latter was being drawn swiftly toward the pipe. Pearl rushed to his aid and arrived just as "Jones" was struggling to keep from being sucked into it.

"Go to Neewah—the Indian—at Keesville!" the young man shouted. "Say Mr. Jones sent you! He will have something to give you—"

As "Jones" finished speaking, his strength gave away and he was suddenly swept through the pipe by the rushing waters.

Pearl Travers managed to rescue herself from her predicament, unmindful of the fact that Deering had been near to her. With a shout she climbed to safety.

Two constabulary officers approached, and she immediately told them of her champion's predicament, and begged them to go to the rescue.

The girl knew not which way to live. Her heart was filled with a vague fear as to the fate of "Jones," but she could not believe that any harm would come to him. Pearl supposed that the pipe emptied itself into the stream at the other side of the cliff.

We will now turn to Keesville, where a remnant tribe of the Hurons were still in existence. Pearl Travers had arrived and was on the new quest. She had not yet heard from "Mr. Jones" but the mysterious nature of the young man made her feel that he was apt to appear on the scene at any moment. A mountaineer had directed her to a small cabin, where Neewah was reported to live. Entering she met the Indian face to face, but her words were interrupted by a surprising declaration.

"We know," Neewah said, "that 'Mr. Jones' is dead, and also that he did not send you here. You, his enemy, are responsible for his death! You overheard him tell a friend to come here—for certain papers left in his hands—and now you come to rob a dead man!"

Pearl was astonished. She was about to make an indignant reply when the door opened and two Indians entered followed by Jude

Tire Difficulties Overcome for Ford Owners A New Development in C-T-C Clincher Cords MUCH of your tire troubles are now over, Mr. Ford-Car-Owner, for the new C-T-C Clincher Cord Tire and special C-T-C Tube eliminate the rim-cutting and tube pinching you have experienced with other tires. The New Tube That Won't Pinch Our engineers have perfected a new C-T-C Inner Tube for 3 1/2-inch C-T-C Clincher Cords which not only prevents pinching—but does away with the use of flaps. It is 3 3/4 inches in size and heavily reinforced next to the bead. The New Tire That Won't Rim-Cut Into the 3 1/2-inch C-T-C Clincher Cord have been built extra heavy sidewalls and larger, stronger beads—giving sturdier carcass and stancher frame. And a Tread That Won't Skid The perfect compounding of rubber and the wear-resisting, road-gripping tread combine to make C-T-C's the safest driving tires ever produced. Powerful traction blocks are there, too, to give purchase in mud and sand. Try the combination of C-T-C Clincher Cord and Special C-T-C Inner Tube, Mr. Ford-Car-Owner. Put it to any test against any clincher cord you ever used. You will learn what tire economy and tire satisfaction really are. Remember—we also make the famous C-T-C 30x3 1/2 straight-side cord for demountable rims. Columbia Tire Corporation Factory and General Sales Offices Portland, Oregon
