Councillor E. Hales, of Manchester, one of the leaders in the Ford Owners' Association, proclaims that "if you take a Ford to an ordinary hotel you get a snub fro mthe 'boots.' " He demands that this condition be remedied.

Thus the democratization of the world by the Ford seems to have reached even dignified and staid old England. Henry Ford's picture, by the way, is becoming almost as common in the streets of London as his motor cars are. London's sidewalk artistsbeggars, who draw crude sketches in the streets and ilve from the pennies given them by kindly passersby-have "discovered" art exhibition is complete these days without a likeness of the Detroit automobile magnate. One artist drew a bold sketch of Ford and underneath it wrote:

"The Richest Man in the World -Drawn by the Poorest One." The inscription so pleased the artist's "customers" that he admitted honesty might compel him to alter it. His hat was soon filled with pennies and sixpences.
