Daily News Letter

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The mis-information that England get about American prohibition would fill a book a day.

England is interested in American prohibition, chiefly in its failure, for England regards this as an experiment which may be extended to this country, if it succeeds. Therefore everyone who has been to America, or who has as much as had a letter from America that derides prohibition, can get a long and enthusiastic hearing in England.

Lord Astor charges that the English liquor trade is behind a strong anti-American propaganda, but certainly the English liquor trade has no measure of control over American statesmen, near-statesmen and semi-statesmen who come to Europe and publicly announce that prohibition is a failure. The English public eats up the words of these individuals, however, and cries for more. The "more" seems to come on every boat that docks.

English newspapers publish in great detail the operations of American bootleggers; in fact some papers publish hardly any other American news except the bootleggers news.

Occasionally some self-appointed expert sits himself down to write an authoritative piece on the situation for the consumption of the English reading public.

Sir A. Maurice, Low, Washington correspondent of the Morning Post, a die-hard organ, has recently written a series of articles on prohibition, in which he informs the English that prohibition has been "seized upon by the dishonest, the selfish, and the hypocritical, who in the livery of prohibition are serving their own unworthy ambitions."

"Why did the President disregard the suggestion of the Supreme Court and require the Secretary of the Treasury to frame the harsh regulations that have so aroused the resentment of all maritime nations?" Sir A. Maurice asks the readers of the Morning Post.

It is with great reluctance that Sir A. Maurice answers his own question. He feels very uneasy about this subject and feels that his words may upset the amity of the two English-speaking nations.

"I am aware that I am on delicate ground," says Sir A. Maurice, "and in danger of being severely criticized. Yet I shall take that risk, believing that the cause of Anglo-American friendship will best be served by the truth."

After spending some time and a considerable quantity of ink explaining that in his opinion truth is the best thing for the Anglo-American amity, which he fears may jostle, Sir A. Maurice tells the readers of the Morning Post the why and wherefore of prohibition, but fails to answer the question which he put.

"Prohibition began as a normal question," Sir A. Maurice has discovered. "It has now become the most sordid political issue this country has ever known."

"It has been seized upon by the dishonest, the selfish, and the hypocritical, who in the livery of prohibition, are serving their own unworthy ambitions or using it as a means for their pecuniary gain. Yet there are millions of good men and good women—and that is the pathetic side of this business—altruistic, self-sacrificing, charitable, righteous in the full sense of the word, who sincerely believed prohibition was to bring comfort and happiness to the world, who cannot be shaken in their conviction, and cannot see they are tools in the hands of the designing and unscrupulous. They have seen the failure of prohibition, and their faith is unshaken. They cannot be ignorant of the harm it has done, and their zeal is unweakened. It is the tragedy of prohibition."

And that's that, Sir A. Maurice knows his Morning Post. He knows that it is long on "plots," "hidden hands" and "sinister dealings." It has discovered more bolshevik plots in London than all of the rest of the newspapers put together and has uncovered more plots in Ireland than the most ardent Sinn Feiners could cook up, but happily none of these plots ever materialized.

However, the readers of the Morning Post do like their "plots" and "sinister schemes" with their breakfast tea, and that's probably why Sir A. Maurice has discovered the great prohibition plot.

The fears of Sir A. Maurice that his disclosures might shake the relations between the United States and Great Britain seem to have been unfounded. Perhaps that is because the Morning Post's readers are limited to a handful.

The lesson in all this seems to be that the United States must have some prohibition diplomacy. A few diplomatic notes on the international angles of prohibition, a few speeches by President

WAR VETERANS RELIEF WORK TO BE KEPT UP

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Ratings of permanent partial disability for sick and wounded veterans will continue to be made at the fourteen district offices of the Veterans' Bureau, according to J. J. Sparks, chairman of the American Legion's national rehabilitation committee.

A recent order issued by the Bureau has been modified to permit rulings in special cases of permanent partial disability to be consummated at the regional offices instead of at the central office, as first provided for. Fearing that the original order of the bureau would tend to bring about recentralization in the Washington office, Mr. Sparks appealed to Director Hines to modify the order. The legion official stated that Director Hines is opposed to recentralization and that he is in accord with the legion's stand for strengthening the authority of the district offices as a means of dealing face to face with the disabled.

The legion has announced a policy of opposition to all efforts to weaken the power of the district offices of the bureau its members believe that claims of the disabled men can be adjusted more efficiently by bureau officials in offices nearer the homes of the sick and wounded veterans.

SEASIDE READY FOR BIG STATE LEGION MEETING

SEASIDE, Aug. 10.—Everything is being made ready for the big state convention of the American Legion which is to be held in Seaside, 6th, 7th and 8th of September. Several added features which are entirely novel are scheduled for the three days entertainment and business transaction.

Through the efforts of George R. Wilbur, State Commander of the Legion and Harry N. Nelson, Department Adjutant, a formidable array of speakers are to be present to render addresses.

Reservations are already being made by those who are planning to attend, and it is estimated that the attendance will run over 2,000. The Oregon public and veterans of all wars have been invited to attend by the Legion, state officers, Seaside legion convention committee and the mayor of Seaside.

EVENING GOWNS CAN BE WORN FOR SWIMMING, TOO

LONDON, Aug. 10.—Costumes suitable for evening gowns, and guaranteed suitable for swimming, are being eagerly bought by feminine London.

They are made of striped taffeta and silk, and are adorned at every angle with bows, frills and flounces.

Hats are made to match, and waterproof adjustable curls in gold, auburn and black are being worn to match the hats.

ROSENBAUM BACK AFTER YEARS IN PORTLAND

A. S. Rosenbaum is back in Southern Oregon, after an absence of seven years residence at Portland. Recently he was promoted to the important position of district freight and passenger agent for Southern Oregon, with offices at Medford. Rosenbaum was always a good friend of Ashland and may be depended upon to do what he can for the development of this section. Ashland is well pleased with the advancement of "Rosie" and will assure the Southern Pacific company that he will have the hearty cooperation of Ashland in his important work.

INCOME TAX REPORTS SENT TO POSTMASTERS

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 10.—Clyde G. Huntley, collector of internal revenue, today mailed to postmasters throughout the state a typewritten tax return for the names of every individual, who filed a federal income tax return for the calendar year 1922, residing in the respective postmaster's immediate locality. By a requirement of the revenue law these lists will be posted by the postmaster for inspection by the general public. This arrangement applies to all postoffices in the state from which returns were filed with the exception of Portland, Eugene and Pendleton. In lieu of typewritten lists at these points, a card index showing the names of all persons who filed returns is maintained at the collector's office in the custom house at Portland and the branch offices at Eugene and Pendleton. These cards may be inspected at any time by interested taxpayers.
