NEW YORK, Aug. 11.—The latest of complexes, the suspenders variety, has the stylish metropolitan population of the metropolis harassed.

Reapers of the hard-earned lure of these obese slaves to "what the correct man is wearing" are agreed on this score: the belt sales are slack.

Being a flexible complex it has all male classes, technically speaking, by the trousers, and manufacturers of the antiquity, it is reported, are predicting that gaudy galluses are "gonna getta grip" on the whole country before the belt has a chance to snap into it and get a tighter hold.

Who's to blame for the revolution? There may be others, but it appears that honors primarily belong to Magnus Johnson, Minnesota Farmer-Senator-elect, and the man who is responsible for the scourge of patent leather hair-combs—Rodolph Valentino alias "The Sheik." It is now evident that little did these esteemed style-setters reckon what the result would be when they came out in the open and evinced their proclivity for greater elasticity in correct dress. Well there seems to be no one to question it—the suspenders are snappy.

Not content with one external revolt, there are those devotees to style who are advocating (no folling) corsets for men. "What's this country coming to, anyway?" the writer heard one man asking another in conversation. "There's no dispute on the point that 'co-wrecked' form would be the corset wearer's, but the real mission of the corset would be to shape the wearer's career."

And all this climaxes an announcement at the Mercantile Exposition (in the broadest sense)
