Daily News Letter

SOFIA, Oct. 6.—Though the Turks have been given a free hand to drive away from their domain and from Constantinople, their apital, in particular, all foreigners, which they are already doing by causing the expulsion of thousands of Greeks, Armenians and other alien elements, and have become again absolute masters of the ancient city, still the burning question of the day throughout Turkey is: "Should Angora or Stamboul be our capital?"

The National Council at Angora, presided over by Mustapha Pasha, has already decided that Angora is to be Turkey's future capital. The grounds for this decision are obvious. The patriotic Turks argue that Angora is strategically invulnerable, as was recently demonstrated in the World War and again in the Greco-Turkish struggle. It is a purely Turkish town, far from the intrigues of European diplomacy and European destructive influence. Constantinople ever since it had become the capital of Turkey has been Turkey's most vulnerable point and has caused, it is declared, the gradual weakening and fall of Turkish power and authority in the world.

"Constantinople will never be rid of the Christian and the infidel," vehemently argues the old Turk. "All the nations on earth know that our greatest mosque there is St. Sophia, once a Christian church, Allah can never be pleased to be worshipped by us Mohammedans in a Christian temple.

"Stamboul is no more a Mohammedan city, but the greatest den of international spies, plotters, corruption and intriguers. We have had enough of all this in the past. Stamboul is no more Islambol (a place full of Turks). It has always been a foreign town for us. It has rejoiced when we had sorrowed and has grieved when we rejoiced and were triumphant."

The general public opinion in Turkey is in favor of Angora as Turkey's future capital. The National Council has already decreed it. It is curious to know also that immediately after that decision was taken the National Assembly passed this resolution and oath, which had to be solemnly uttered by every member of the Assembly: "I swear before Allah that I shall not follow in the path which is contrary to the happiness and salvation of my country and that I shall ever remain a faithful and loyal servant and supporter of our national sovereignty."

Outsiders, however, think that the old Turks will have to yield to expediency and that Stamboul will continue to be capital of new Turkey also, and that the future of Turkey would depend on whether Constantinople will remain as heretofore the metropolis of the Ottoman Empire.

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—Shades of Gilbert and Sullivan! New York theatrical producers whose forte is musical plays are apparently going to stage a comeback for the once-popular comic opera. You know, the "Miss Bob White," "Madame Modiste," "The Mikado," "Princess Bonnie," "Chimes of Normandy," "Little Tycoon" stuff—the kind of plays that linger now in the minds of the old and middleaged, but are as strange to the youthful moderns as chicken is to an Eighth avenue chicken pie.

The reason for the contemplated recrudescence of that which fell into disuse with the advent of the musical comedy is the discrimination evinced by the theatre-going public in the last several seasons. Producers have ample proof, they say, that audiences nowadays want musical plays that have some "meat" for mental as well as optical consumption.

Arthur Hammerstein, prominent American producer, whose "Wildflower" met with such marked success during the last season and which shows evidence of retaining its popularity this season, spoke for himself and others of his profession the other day when he said: "America has found herself on the musical comedy stage, and where she led the world into a chaotic mass of blaring sound and wild and rampant colors in revues she will again take the lead in bringing the theatre to comic opera which will live up to what the name conveys."

In other words, comic opera is to be the child of evolution. It's usurper, the old-type musical play, which in turn gave rise to revues, all sorts of vanities, scandals, follies and the like, and now the stage is being set for comic opera to evolve from all this—to stage a return engagement.

Yet despite the contention of Mr. Hammerstein "that theatrical managers have rung the death-knell" of musical plays minus plots, the revues, scandals, vanities, follies and artists' models—things which are odds and ends pieced together, with artistic and even extravagant staging and are absolutely devoid of plot that runs throughout the production—continue to magnetize the duceats.

But Mr. Hammerstein insists that "the new era of finesse has arrived" on the stage, and no more will be tolerated the "bawling, syncopated soubrette whose only acquisition was a reputation in the divorce courts and a vulgar method of kicking."

Shake hands with Mrs. Black Weasel, esteemed matron of the tribe of Arapohoes, of Wyoming. If you're one of the many who dislike the metropolis as a permanent place of residence you'll be glad to meet her, for Mrs. Black Weasel can't see why anyone wants to live in New York.

One of the twenty-seven full-blooded Indians who travelled all the way from Wyoming to camp in the city for a while before going to London to give the subjects of Britain a sight of the real thing as redskins go, and one of the few squaws of the old school who speak English, Mrs. Weasel was frank in branding the city a "hot-house that wilts flowers."

A fine figure of speech that, if you understand what she meant. It seems that nowadays not even the red race is immune from the greatest scourge of the city, but Mrs. Weasel, modest like, refused to delve into that subject.

However, her visit was productive of a good phrase typifying the "melting pot":

"A hothouse that wilts flowers."

It might as well be made known now as later—

The mythical, the oft-convenient John Doe is no mo'.

John Doe actually is the name of a human being. He resides in Brooklyn, and how or where he got the name has not been fully determined. However, the other day John landed where all John Does land—in court. He got what many John Does get—thirty days.

Near beer on Ellis Island, instead of being a legitimized evil as relics of the "good old days" think it is, is intended as a boon to the unsuspecting immigrants who through ignorance of vital world affairs are not even aware that the United States is rehearsing prohibition and that bootlegging has become a lucrative profession. The purpose of near beer on the immigrant isle is humanitarian—to "break the news gently."

GYPSY BLOWS GOOD FORTUNE INTO MAN'S WALLET; LIFTS $20

ORLAND, Cal., Oct. 8.—A Hanley of Montana and his bride, on a tour of California on their honeymoon, encountered two Gypsy women on the highway near Orland with the result that Hanley was out $20 and put to considerable trouble in regaining it.

The Gypsy women flagged Hanley to a stop and begged him to allow them to tell his fortune. As the Montana had never seen a Gypsy before and was unaware of their light fingered methods he allowed them to "blow good fortune into his pocket-book." When he arrived in Orland he counted over the bills in his pocketbook and discovered he was shot a $20 bill.

Constable Hicks of Orland was notified, and after a chase, which ended in Hamilton City, the Gypsy band was located and the fortune telling woman identified. After some little argument, the $20 was returned, and Hanley and his bride resumed their journey, not wishing to be troubled with prosecuting the Gypsy women.

IRON WORKS MAKES SMALL STAMP MILL

Relining Cupola For Big Run of Winter Work; Makes Big Edges

The latest pet piece of work turned out by the Ashland Iron Works is a small stamp mill made for use on the Klamath River, to be used by A. A. Moser, of California. The job is a five-stamp mill of 150 pound drop. This size mill, considerably smaller than the standard small mill, has been devised by them, especially for ease in transportation, of sufficient size to be practicable, yet readily moveable, and desirable for opening of small properties and prospecting.

The local industry is now turning out the fifth edger, with a 48-inch cut, of the season. Mr. Hatfield, foreman, said few people were acquainted with the fact that the Ashland plant is capable of doing such work.

The plant is being improved considerably for a good run of winter foundry work. The cupola is being relined, preparatory to doing quite a good bit of work for the Hartman Syndicate. A car of Connelville, Pa., coke has been received, and as soon as the cupola is relined work will be started on making retorts for the Hartman Syndicate.

A. F. L. UNANIMOUSLY BACK OF CHILD LABOR BILL WHICH IS PENDING

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—Special session of the American Federation of Labor delegates ended in a unanimous decision to back the pending child labor law, limiting the employment of persons under eighteen. The convention issued a call for local, state, national and international organizations to work for the passage of the amendment to the federal constitution.

The committee on education approved the following recommendations:—

Establishments of study classes for all workers, opening in each federation of a special education department, appointment of an educational committee to co-operate with the educational bureaus.

In an address before the convention Max Hays, Cleveland, delegate from the typographical unions, scored the federation and the newspapers of the country for their one-sided and repeated attacks on the radicals. In a fiery address he said:

"Unless some of the truck, paraded by the press and before this convention, is stopped you are going to drive thousands from the ranks of organized labor."

Hays pleaded for support of the union label movement, as the most powerful instrument in building up organized labor. The fire works is expected Monday, when the report is received dealing with resolutions on recognition of Russia, the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, formation of a third political party by labor, the Fascist movement, and amalgamation of trade unions.
