Daily News Letter

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—Calvin Coolidge probably is the most reserved and reticent man, conversationally, that ever sat in the White House. He is as sparing with his words as he is with his dollars—and he has always been an economical man, largely dependent upon his salary as a public official for his living.

Yet, despite this reticence and taciturnity, more people have been guests at the White House table since Calvin Coolidge became president than in any similar period under any of his predecessors.

Harding, particularly, and Roosevelt, and to a lesser extent, Taft were hospitable men who liked to talk as they dined and lunched. They entertained thousands during their terms; yet under Calvin Coolidge the White House chef and kitchen force are worked as never were worked before. Scarcely a day goes by but sees guests at the mansion for luncheon or dinner.

At first Washington was a bit puzzled over this. As Vice-President, Mr. Coolidge was an inevitable guest at capital dinner parties. That is a part of the job of being Vice-President.

Cynics of Washington life have observed that to be Vice-President one must be fortified with a copper-lined stomach and a goat-like digestive apparatus. The Vice-President "eats" for the President.

The Coolidges themselves seldom entertained. They were entertained. Now all that is changed. The guests of social and political Washington have become the hosts.

Why this sudden transition? Politics! It answers many questions in Washington.

When a sudden stroke of fate elevated Calvin Coolidge from the comparative obscurity of the Vice-Presidency to the highest elective office in the world his acquaintance with public men, even with the prominent figures in his own party, was very slight. He never called any of them by their first names, as did Harding, Roosevelt and Taft. He didn't know them. They didn't know him.

Before he had long been in the White House, so the story goes, Mr. Coolidge realized that if he were to succeed himself he would have to increase his acquaintance among party leaders, men of affairs in business—not in merely formal ways—but in a more intimate way.

How could it be done? The question was discussed, it is said between Mr. Coolidge and the very few men who have been his intimates for years—when he was a Mayor of a Massachusetts town and later Governor of the State.

"Get to know them around your dinner table," was the gist of the advice he received.

Hence in the three months that Mr. Coolidge has occupied the Presidency there has been a constant stream of guests through the dining room of the White House.

Around his own dinner table Calvin Coolidge is becoming more intimate with those high in the councils of his own party and in the great businesses of the country—the men who, by the way, usually select Presidential candidates.

There are few men, no matter how high their estate or how important they may be, who can withstand the lure of dining with the President. It is an opportunity eagerly sought and seldom if ever declined.

There is something magic in the words "dining with the President." Bankers, railroad presidents, captains of industry—it matters not how important they are in their own fields—they accept with alacrity invitations to "dine with the President."

It is said by some who have been his guests that President Coolidge is no more loquacious at his own dinner table than he is at someone else's. His guests do the talking. He does the listening. But the significant thing is that Calvin Coolidge is overcoming the political handicap of a non-political acquaintance. He is learning to know the prominent men in business and political life, and they in turn are learning to know this quiet, smallish man who is prepared to put up a bitter battle for his own succession.

AGE OF LOUD SPEAKERS HERE

Results in Straining of Vocal Chords and Throat Troubles, Says a Music Teacher.

A music teacher remarked the other day that more and more people were going to her for voice production, on the advice of a doctor, who rightly said that their throat troubles were merely the result of straining their vocal chords, says London Answers.

"We belong to an age of loud speakers," she said smilingly. "Particularly women and girls talk much more loudly than ever before. The restless age in which we live is responsible, and this modern shouting accounts for the number of strained throats about."

Her statement raises a very interesting point, because we all certainly find that the voice raised the loudest usually gets home first! The sweet sipping prunes and prisms of a hundred years ago won't get us a telephone call, or a bun in a tea shop, or a jumper at a sale, or tell us the way to Putney bridge.

The man or woman who whistles in these crowded days never gets very far.

One man said, quite seriously, the other day, that he thought modern dance music had a great deal to do with people's strident tones. And there certainly is something in that, too.

Occasionally, after all the harsh voices some comes to town with a soft, crooning speaking voice. You can spot such a man or woman at once, and know, too, that they found their soothing tones in the heart of the country. And you know as well that, if they live in a big city for long, they will be forced to shout—as we all do—for our daily bread!

PECULIARITIES OF SENATORS

Spencer Eats No Breakfast, Curtis Won't Use Elevator, and Overman Takes Snuff.

During the lull in business employes at the capitol have had time to take stock of some peculiarities and idiosyncrasies of senators, says the Washington correspondent of the New York Herald. For instance, they have noted:

Senator Smoot of Utah only shaves, or is shaved, every other day. He thinks that is often enough and he "likes to give his face a rest."

Senator Spencer of Missouri never eats breakfast. But Senator Moses of New Hampshire, who was his guest at luncheon recently, says "you should see him eat the rest of the day."

Senator Curtis of Kansas never takes an elevator if he has the time to climb the stairs. He says climbing stairs is the best "reducer" he has ever tried. During the summer he has done much stair climbing and has lost 25 pounds.

Senator Overman of North Carolina is one of the few senators who now and then take a pinch of snuff from the historic snuff boxes in the senate chamber, which are kept filled during the sessions of congress.

Senator Cameron of Arizona says he is the best cook in the senate. When a boy of sixteen years old he was the sole cook for a large crew on a fishing smack which operated off the coast of Maine. He also holds records as a fisherman.

Senator LaFollette calms his nerves after a heated debate by "pulling" on an old, well-seasoned pipe.

Birth of Oil Industry.

The oil industry had its birth in the United States about 1858, when crude oil was analyzed and a well was drilled at Titusville, Pa. But the Indians, and the races before them, knew crude oil. Thousands of years before Christ, Babylonian and Chaldean masons used it in semi-liquid form for cementing the bricks of their towering walls, and it was used in building the pyramids. Herodotus mentions a well from which three substances, asphalt, salt and oil, were pumped. Oil from natural springs in Sicily was used in lamps in the temple of Jupiter at Rome, and the wealthy illuminated their homes with it. The ancient Chinese and the Persians used it for light and heat, and it entered into the preservatives of the Egyptian embalmers.

Heirs to Peorages.

Some four hundred British peerages are extinct, of which 120 have lapsed since 1900. Five went last year through the demise without successors of Lords Ludlow, Bryce, Northcliffe, Breadalbane and Lindley. This year there are four so far, being the baronies of Seaford, Weardale, Sanderson and Roe. Sometimes peerages are revived which were long dormant. The longest abeyance was 547 years, in the case of the barony of Strabolgi, terminated in 1916 in favor of the petitioner, Mr. C. M. Kenworthy. No doubt there are in Canada heirs to some of these dormant peerages, because proof is a costly process, and very difficult.

TIMELY TIPS

Now is the time to fill the fruit closet shelves for winter. Red peppers are so good to add to salads and meat dishes that a few jars will be enjoyed.

Canned Red Peppers.—Wash and cut peppers in strips with a sharp knife. Cover with boiling water; let stand three minutes; drain, plunge into ice water to cover, in which there is a large piece of ice. Let stand to thoroughly chill; drain again and pack solidly in pint jars. To one quart of vinegar add two cupfuls of sugar; bring to the boiling point and boil fifteen minutes. Pour the boiling hot vinegar over the peppers to overflow the can. Seal and store in a cool place.

Hot Relish.—Boil, peel and chop two dozen small beets, add to them one-half cupful of horseradish. Put two blades of mace, one tablespoonful of ginger, six cloves into a cheese-cloth bag, place in a saucepan with one quart of vinegar. Bring to a boil and when boiling hot pour over the beets. Seal and keep for a week, when it will be ready for use.

Pepper Relish.—Wash and cut into halves or quarters one dozen sweet red peppers and one dozen green peppers; chop fine fourteen medium-sized onions, sliced and chopped fine, one cupful of sugar, two cupfuls of vinegar and one tablespoonful of salt. Boil the vinegar-sugar mixture, drop in the vegetables and boil fifteen minutes. Seal while hot.

Tomato Conserve.—Take five pounds of ripe tomatoes, two pounds of sugar, three lemons cut into dice, one cupful of sliced citron and one and one-half cupfuls of raisins. Slice the tomatoes, chop the citron or cut fine with scissors; add all the other ingredients and cook until thick. Add one cupful of walnut meats coarsely chopped and, when boiling hot, pour into jars and seal.

A nice combination for marmalade is equal parts of tomatoes and crab-apple, prepared as usual. The mixture is put through a sieve and sugar added to suit the taste.

Neely Maxwell

The Swannery.

It is a wonderful sight, that great lagoon covered by vast snowdrakes; wonderful to behold the heavy uprising of a flight of them from the water, scattering along like an airplane before it lifts, to see the tremendous impetus with which they touch the water again and rush through it till the resistance stops them; most wonderful of all to hear the glorious metallic clang of their wings as eight or ten in a V-shaped formation fly over your head, their noble pinions flapping strongly in the tremendous carriage of flights more graceful, but none more impressive, nor, I think, more splendid than the swan's, unless it be the heron's.—F. J. H. Darton.

Martha Washington.

Martha Washington's portrait is to appear on the new four-cent United States stamp. She was the daughter of one of the most aristocratic planters in Virginia whom Washington married in 1759 in his twenty-sixth year. She was a model wife. Official social life was started by her in the infant republic. Washington himself was a highly polished man. He insisted upon strict and appropriate etiquette in the conduct of the government's social life. Martha Washington's receptions were managed with the greatest skill and she won such fame as a hostess that by the contemporary ambassadors she was called a queen.
