NEWS LETTER

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 30.—Despite the recent closing of the Famous Players-Lasky studio here, which came like a thunderbolt from a clear sky, many Hollywood film producers, directors and players are trying to survive the "slack" season.

Each year during the Winter season the Hollywood studios "slow down" in their production program, but never before has it been so marked as to cause the closing of such a studio as the Lasky organization, one of the biggest in the business.

However, all the studios are not all gloom, and many of them are going ahead with programs almost normal.

At the United Studios building plans for several new structures are under way.

From M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios, comes word that the improvement program continue with even greater activity.

Mack Sennett, one of the important independent producers, recently issued a statement declaring that instead of harboring any plans for retrenchment he expects to spend more. Also, he said, he expects to revive his famous bathing beauty girls.

Maurice Tourneur, another independent producer, had this to say: "I was never so active in my life. Have started another production and expect to be engaged on this film for several months. Following this production there will be others. I do not anticipate any suspension in operations."

Richard Walton Tully, another producer, said: "We have just concluded plans for what will prove my most active producing season since I became associated with the screen. It looks like an active season ahead of me."

Joseph M. Schenck, producer of films featuring Norma and Constance Talmadge and Buster Keaton, voiced there would be no shut down in production for his three stars. Norma Talmadge has just started production of a new film and the first work in films starring Constance Talmadge and Buster Keaton will soon be started, it was stated.

Among the players, who are supposed to be hard hit by the "slump" in production, there are many who apparently do not feel disposed to spread gloom over the outlook.

Conway Tearle, one of the best-known leading men, said: "From all indications the outlook to me personally is very active. At present I have two New York engagements under consideration. As soon as my present contract has been fulfilled I expect to take up other engagements now pending."

Lloyd Hughes, another actor, declared he was working at present and had bookings for at least three months to come. Among others whose services in films are either engaged or who have new contracts under consideration that will keep them active during the prescribed suspension period are Blanche Sweet, Tully Marshall, James Kirkwood and many others.

It is generally admitted by those in "the know" that many of the bigger studios here have many unreleased pictures; pictures that are "on the shelves," and that in addition to these each of them has at least two and in many cases three "big" films that have just been released for showing or have not yet been released. When the Lasky Corporation tacked up the "closed" sign across the studio front gate approximately 2,000 persons, including workers in all branches of the film industry, found themselves out of work. And, because the other studios are "filled," they find it difficult to get work.

RALSTON REGARDED AS "WHEEL HORSE"

His Defeat of Beveridge Was One of Strange Upsets of Last Election.

Senator Samuel Moffet Ralston, of Indiana, came out of political retirement to make the race for the Senate last year and provided one of the startling upsets of the elections when he defeated the Republican candidate, former Senator Albert J. Beveridge. Ralston is a conservative, a man long in the Democratic party fold and always a party man. Beveridge is a Progressive-Republican, a companion in political belief of many of the new Senators who were victorious over more conservative candidates a year ago.

Numerous factors contributed to Ralston's election. The Republican party in Indiana was virtually divided against itself, the result of bitter factional broils.

Has Many Friends But perhaps above all in the contributing factors was Ralston himself, a man with magnetic personality, with the intimate personal appeal that finds so much success in Middle Western politics.

Since the days of the rule of Tilden and Hendricks over the Democratic party in the State Ralston has been a veritable "wheel horse" in the party's councils. Under the present leadership of Tom Taggart, Ralston is no less a favorite, and it was Taggart's influence and guidance which in a large measure persuaded Ralston to leave his farm in southern Indiana and re-enter politics.

Ralston is of the personal type of Grover Cleveland and to a more remarkable extent resembles the former president. He has the same gray mustache, the heavy jowls, the genial, smiling face and the same pleasing mannerisms.

Indiana Governor As Governor of Indiana, 1913-17, Ralston was instrumental in reorganizing the financial system of the state. It is the ardent claim of his followers that he saved the state millions of dollars.

Ralston is a farmer and a lawyer, but pre-eminently a farmer.

In many quarters Ralston is regarded as a presidential possibility in 1924. His friends are particularly optimistic over his opportunities should a deadlock between McAdoo and Underwood grip the Democratic convention. In that event he is being groomed as a "dark horse," much as the late President Harding was put forward in 1920.

Ralston was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, December, 1, 1857. He was admitted to the bar in 1886 and practiced in Lebanon, Indiana.

An immediate reply was forwarded to the Pratt Institute and they were also favored with pictures of this beauty spot of Southern Oregon, together with offers of the utmost cooperation on the part of the chamber. After extended correspondence the pleasing news was received from Brooklyn that Ashland had been selected for the summer school.

school will most likely be in session during the term of the summer normal and will afford students of the normal unexcelled opportunities for the study of art, as well as all others who have ambitions along this line. After arriving at the decision to select Ashland as the location for the summer school the institute requested the secretary of the local chamber to name an interested and capable correspondent and Mrs. V. V. Mills was chosen for the position. In order that the people of Ashland and those who attend the Winter Fair may have an opportunity of gaining information as to the excellent character of work performed, and as an exhibit of good faith toward Ashland, the Pratt Institute has announced their intention of making a display, which has been forwarded to Mrs. Mills to become a part of the art exhibit at the coming Fair.
