HUMBLE YOURSELVES:—Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time: Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you.—1 Peter 5:6,7.

HOME INSTINCT STRONG AS EVER

Few men and fewer women begin life without the ambition to own a home of their own. A place which in mind at least is to be almost sacred. A castle protected by the law of the land safe from intrusion. Where the family is to be reared; to be adorned and beautified during the vigorous years of life and then truly a haven of refuge in the declining years.

Men and women are the same today as ever. Instincts are the same. Inherent qualities are not controlled by changed conditions. Modern life may suggest subterfuges of a home, may make the realization of the desire for a home difficult, but though the subterfuge triumph and the desire fail, the instinct though stilled is as strong as ever.

There are those who regret that the modern idea suggests placing the home secondary in importance in life. Why a castle, when theatres, dances, card parties and amusements in public places must be attended every night in the week? Too many consider the home with family prayers, family gatherings, and a place which is considered habitable several evenings during the week, one which is presided over by some old foggy. The pendulum has swung forward and will swing back. There will come the time when the home owning and home loving instinct will prevail and the home be reinstated.

TO THE PROSPECTIVE HOMESEAKER

Ashland is one of the few towns of five thousand or more population in the country that celebrated Christmas without a single arrest being reported by the police department. Although not in keeping with the spirit of the occasion, Christmas is a time selected by many as a period for drinking and other hilarious practices. Immediately following Christmas news agencies herald the reports of deaths resulting here and there from drinking and carousing. Police court dockets are filled with complaints charging numerous defendants with being drunk and disorderly. In fact the police usually make their biggest hauls at Christmas time.

The record in Ashland reflects a condition in the social and home life of the city that is gratifying. It portrays law abiding tendencies on the part of Ashland people and reveals temperate habits.

To call attention to the fact that Christmas, carrying its age-old traditions and lessons, was not besmirched with intoxication and rowdiness is not a reflection on other towns but reveals a local advantage that should appeal strongly to the prospective homeseeker who is desirous of securing a location where his boys and girls can be reared under influences that are healthful and clean.

GASSED IN FRANCE

In the Sunday Journal appeared the story of an Oregon boy who was gassed in France. Weakened and with days interrupted with sickness, he took up the fight for the existence not only of himself but a wife and four children.

The voluntary breaking up of a home is a tragedy. The divorce courts are full of such mischance. But this boy's home has been breaking up, with every fibre of resistance in him set against it. Think how you would feel under similar circumstances, and you will understand.

One by one the children have been transferred to the care of others. Now only one is left, and the mother. A few days ago he was told he should go to a hospital for treatment. Uncle Sam would provide the hospital care. But his answer was no. While he was gone, what would happen to the remnant of his home?

He is one of the ex-service men who during the Christmas season has been waiting for work. Heavy labor and protracted effort are beyond his strength. He has been glad for odd jobs and temporary work, hoping that something permanent would come and open the door to the re-establishment of his home.

About war there is nothing merciful. It takes fine, hopeful, confident young men, and it sends them back weakened and broken by wound or insidious disease.

But there can be mercy and sympathy when the boys return home.—Oregon Daily Journal.

THE CANNED AGE

From the maritime provinces of Canada lobster canners report a successful season. So we are assured that lobsters are still offered for sale. But the oldtime lobster palace has been pushed out of undisputed favor by the newer blandishments of cabaret, tea room, and roof garden.

Who remembers restaurants with aquariums in the windows and sea food displayed in native state? These places were usually ornate, and much given to gilt and mirrors. They were a rendezvous of ladies of the chorus and their admirers. Live lobsters were to be had in those leisurely days, and ceremony was made of their immolation on the altar of fellowship. But imagine a beauty of the Floradora sextet dining on the canned crustacean of this day! The very thought is lese majeste.

Cans are hardheaded, and not given to romancing. True, time was when a certain nondescript receptacle was rushed hilariously up and down back alleys to the imminent peril of its foaming content of malt cheer, but that was only a pathetic insurgency against the encroachments of a systematic utilitarianism. Now we are come to the age of cans—we live on canned food, canned light, canned transportation, canned drama, canned music. The curious archaeologist of later centuries may read the answer to our riddle in the strata of our can dumps.—The Nation's Business.

A Real F. F. V. In The Ziegfeld Follies

Brooke Johns

TAKE THOSE LIPS AWAY

Take, oh take those lips away, a-way, Lips that never mean a word they say.

Southern Aristocrat Shatters Family Traditions by Taking to Stage

New York City.—An F. F. V. and he never even told his press agent about it!

That's why Broadway simply can't understand Brooke Johns, graduate of Georgetown University and soloist in the Ziegfeld Follies this year. It came out by accident the other day that the good-looking, modest young fellow, who is a sort of matinee idol crowd town, comes of the bluest Virginia blood and numbers governors, senators, archbishops and all sorts of aristocrats among his ancestors.

The girls who adorn Mr. Ziegfeld's production have always made a point of their family connections, real or fancied, so they can't imagine why Mr. Johns keeps his noble secret dark.

"It's because your family doesn't count after you get out rustling for yourself," the singer protested, really embarrassed. "My job is so fascinating that it gives me no time to think about things like ancestors that are all in the past.

"Look at my hit song, 'Take Those Lips Away.' I've been looking for several years for a song idea like that. A sort of superlative degree of all the sentimental synecopation of the past. It is by my friends, Joe McCarthy and Harry Tierney, and I'm having the time of my life putting it over.

"It's what you really see that counts in this kind of an activity. My ancestors can't help, so what other to lug them out before the public!"

According to physicians, the condition of the lad is still serious.

Health Hints by the Father of Physical Culture

Milk is the greatest of all diet cures. It is already scientifically combined. I have personally secured benefits at different times in my own life that could not be measured in money value. John D. Rockefeller, the richest man in the world, advertised nearly thirty years ago and offered a million dollars for a new stomach. I never heard of any one accepting this offer, but a short time after that reports were frequently circulated of his interest in outdoor life, golf, etc., and now, at his greatly advanced age, it is reported that he lives exclusively on milk; that he is maintaining his life at his present great age because of this simple diet.

The milk diet, properly prepared for and properly used, is capable of bringing about miraculous changes in the physical organism. There are times in the life of every human unit when the milk diet can be of extraordinary value. It will undoubtedly give you more life while you live in it may add many years to your life. It may actually save your life in a crisis when a simple, invaluable food can be used advantageously.

Indeed, the food value of milk can hardly be overestimated. This may be better visualized by remembering that a quart of milk equals in food value three-quarters of a pound of beefsteak, two pints of oysters, eight eggs, two pounds of chicken, three-fifths of a pound of pork chops, or three pounds of fresh codfish.

When one is securing, then, from four to six quarts of milk daily (the usual amount taken on the full milk diet) one can see that the body is securing a large amount of most valuable and wholesome nourishment. Owing to the selective action of the cells of the body and because every necessary element is furnished to normalize functional processes and make it unnecessary and practically impossible for the cells to take up an excess of a certain element, all of any particular element that is supplied above the absolute demands of the human economy for wear and tear, maintaining and increasing weight, and repair work is expelled from the body through normal eliminative channels.

This is decidedly opposite to the action of the system when given the usual conventional diet. In such a diet the system is not supplied with every requisite element, but receives some far in excess, with few corrective, normalizing elements. The final result is an exhaustion of certain functions and a deposition of toxic elements in certain tissues.

Limited space does not permit of extended instruction here, on how to go on a milk diet so I will have to deal with this in another article.

NEVADA BOY INJURED BY CHRISTMAS TREE

GRASS VALLEY, Nev., Dec. 27.—Little Raymond Berry, son of William Berry of the Hills Flat section, spent Christmas Day in bed and in a semi-conscious condition, all because the Christmas tree from which he expected so much pleasure fell upon him. The accident happened in the hills near here, where the elder Berry and his son had gone to procure a family Christmas tree. The tree fell in an unexpected direction and young Raymond was caught.

According to physicians, the condition of the lad is still serious.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Gray, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients, at very little cost. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly: You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

Aquarium Gives Life and Color to Winter Windows

WITH winter closing in and shifting the social emphasis from outdoor to indoor life, the aquarium sends a welcome note of animation to the living room. And the place for it is the window—the natural focal point on gray and blue days.
Finding an aquarium that snugly fits a particular window sill is always difficult, for windows vary widely in size. Such aquariums are usually built to order. Anyone handy with tools will find it easy to make one for himself.
The first step is to measure the window sill and decide what portion of its area the aquarium is to occupy. In the case of the ordinary "deep" window, the space will measure about eight or thirty inches. Having determined accurately the size, construct a base for the aquarium from a seven-eighths-inch piece of clear white pine. Since it is to be a visible part of a piece of living room furniture, the edges should be carefully finished with a smoothing plane, and then sandedpapered.
Next secure the moulding that will edge the four sides of the base, and hold in alignment the aquarium's four plate glass walls. The moulding shown in cross section in Figure 2 may be had finished for use in a seven-sixteenths inch size. The corners where the four sections of moulding join should be mitred as shown in Figure 1.
At this point the aquarium base and moulding should be given several coats of paint or color varnish selected in harmony with the woodwork or furniture of the room. Before securing the plate glass sides, obtain from a tinmith four strips of sheet copper, each of which should be one and one-half inches in width and a trifle less than six inches in length. They are bent to form angles to bind the plate glass joints as shown in Figures 1 and 3, and their bases fit inside the mitred joints of the moulding.
With the aquarium base and copper angles complete, take them to any store or glazier handling plate glass, and have four plates cut to fit snugly inside the copper angles. The glazier should also pierce the upper corners of the glass sides and the copper angles as shown in Figure 3 for the accommodation of small copper bolts in the final assembly. The length of the plate glass sides will, of course, be determined by the inside measurements of the moulding on the base. Their width, however, which will be the height of the finished aquarium, should be about six inches.
After assembling the sides and base, securing the copper angles with small copper bolts, the floor of the aquarium should be covered with a sheet of zinc or well-painted tin. When the edges of the aquarium floor and the jointed plate glass sides have been neatly puttied, the aquarium is ready for the native element of its prospective many inhabitants.
