APRIL 28
OH THAT MEN would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men.—Psalm 107:21.

LET COMMON SENSE PREVAIL

It is evident to anyone who has given even limited consideration to the conditions that prevail in Northwest states as a result of the hoof and mouth disease that is prevalent in California that it is high time for coordination of the states with the federal government, now that the latter has assumed the responsibility of fighting the malady and is in command of the situation in general. Following an investigation which the Tidings believes is convincing we are of the opinion that some of the restrictions that exist against California are needless and that the efforts being exerted by the Northwest states are disorganized and filled with duplication. There is little or no uniformity in the embargoes enforced by the various states of the Northwest and those to the east of California. Tourists and other travellers leaving the southern districts of California are subjected to from one to a half dozen fumigations. Those traveling the Coast route through California northward are compelled to undergo rather thorough fumigation, it is stated with authority. Then there is the spectacle of another fumigation at the Oregon station near the state line and after tourists have passed through Oregon and plan to enter Washington they are run through a third delousing plant. This naturally grows tiresome and if continued tourists on the Pacific coast this summer will be as scarce as Laplanders in the equatorial regions.

The Tidings, realizing the enormous loss the malady is causing in California, and alive to the necessity that it must not be allowed to spread to the herds of Oregon or other states, maintains that every reasonable barrier should be erected to prevent the disease spreading, but that some foolish and extreme measures are in vogue is evident. Embargoes ought to be uniform and one thorough disinfection of tourists and travellers after they have left the infected district should be sufficient. Now that the federal government is in charge, why not cooperate with that force in the work of fumigating tourists at a strategic point, and make the single operation suffice. Oregon, Washington and Idaho can well afford to adopt this method, sharing the expense. This will avoid duplication and do away with subjecting tourists and the travelling public to numerous fumigations at different points. The plan is feasible and will entail less expense on the individual states. Perhaps the same plan could be followed by Nevada, Arizona and Utah.

There is also a well founded opinion that fruits and vegetables are not carriers of the hoof and mouth virus. In fact government authorities state that never has an epidemic been traced to that source, and if this is true the embargo on products from districts that are not infected could be raised with beneficial results to all states concerned. To place unnecessary embargoes on California products is doing great injury to that state not only, but will be reflected in the industries of all states with which she carries on commerce.

The only three agencies known by which the disease is transmitted is by infected animals direct; by humans that have been in contact with the infected districts and animals, and by conveyances in which infected animals have been moved. The best posted authorities agree that if these three agencies are controlled that the hoof and mouth malady will soon be a thing of the past. With federal authorities in control of the districts in which the disease is prevalent we have every reasonable assurance that infected herds will not be shuffled from infected to free districts as the gambler shuffles his deck of cards. We know that only those who have necessary business are permitted to enter infected pastures and fields, and are compelled to undergo thorough fumigation before leaving the premises. We also know that none of the afflicted animals are being transported in freight cars, nor are cars being brought into Oregon for use without first being thoroughly disinfected.

By all means let Oregon protect its livestock herds, but let us take a common sense view of the situation and proceed along sensible lines, cooperating at all times to a degree that duplication will be eliminated and unnecessary regulations and restrictions eliminated. We can follow a policy of safety and at the same time not entail a financial loss and throw the state into the throes of a condition that will spell ruin for many lines of business and industry.

WHAT RUSSIA MUST DO

Russia has been "recognized" by Great Britain, but how much this recognition amounts to may be judged by the memorandum which a number of British bankers have sent to Prime Minister MacDonald.

What Russia wants from the rest of the world is not so much the formal acceptance of her present government as official, as it is credit and trade. And the British bankers, who control the credit of the country, and who finance its trade, can pretty effectually keep both from Russia, insofar as Great Britain is concerned, unless Russia will meet their conditions.

Those conditions differ in no wise from the practical ones proposed by Secretary Hughes. Public and private debts must be recognized; the private property of foreigners must be restored; courts must be independent of government interference; private contracts must be recognized as legal and binding; private property must be protected from confiscation; freedom of trade must be permitted; and Russia must realize that she comes into the loan market on no more favorable terms than any other nation.

These are all conditions that govern the flow of private capital, which demands first of all security, and in the second place a fair return for its use. That return is government by the laws of competition. There is nothing prejudicial to Russia in these stipulations. If Russia wants to do business with other countries, she must play the game according to the accepted international rules. She cannot make her own rules and expect other people to adopt them.

There is a time for everything, and this applies even to the eating of green onions.

As we understand it, these Russians are perfectly willing to pay their debts providing they don't have to use their own money.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS

TREASURER
I am candidate for the republican nomination for a second term as Treasurer of Jackson county, subject to the May primary. If nominated and elected I will conduct the office as in the past, in accordance with the laws of the state.
Adv. if A. C. WALKER

FOR COUNTY CLERK
I hereby announce myself as a candidate on the republican ticket for nomination for the office of County Clerk at the May primaries. I have for the past 5 years been a Deputy County Clerk and am familiar with every branch of the office, and if elected, I will give close attention to the duties of the office and feel confident that I will prove worthy of your support.
DELLILA STEVENS.

COUNTY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT
I am a candidate for republican nomination at the May primaries for the office of County School Superintendent of Jackson County. I have served the county for three and a half years as county superintendent, and will, if again elected, work as earnestly for the cause of education as heretofore.
SUSANNE HOMES CARTER. Jacksonville

COUNTY CORONER
I am a republican candidate for reelection for Coroner of Jackson county, subject to primaries May 16.
Platform: Experience, personal attention, economic management. Being a substantial taxpayer I am interested in the economical management of all county offices.
JOHN A. PEARL.

CORONER
I hereby announce myself as a candidate on the republican ticket, for nomination at the coming primary for the office of coroner of Jackson county.
By virtue of my profession as an undertaker, I feel that I have every qualification and the necessary equipment to properly handle any duties which may arise.
H. W. CONGER.

SHERIFF
As a candidate in the Republican primaries for the office of Sheriff, I desire to clearly define my position on the future conduct of that office if elected.
My experience as a deputy sheriff of Jackson County, and as a State Traffic Officer, has taught me that no peace officer can give satisfactory and efficient service to the public when his authority and responsibility are shared by another. The present unsatisfactory law enforcing conditions is largely attributable to divided authority between antagonistic peace officers, elements that are apt to produce conflict, inefficiency and useless expense.
If elected I shall insist upon and expect to maintain the right to perform all the duties of Sheriff in this county, and it follows that I will be uncompromisingly opposed to special officers except Federal Agents, with whom I pledge full and complete cooperation. I am in thorough accord with both the letter and spirit of the prohibition laws and pledge my active and untiring efforts in their enforcement.
J. J. McMAHON.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENT
I hereby announce my candidacy for County Judge, subject to the decision of the Democratic primary, on the following platform:
Reduce taxes through an economical and business-like administration of county affairs. Stop needless expenditures and waste and give proper support and attention to good roads, public schools and other vital and public necessities. Enforce the prohibition law efficiently and properly through proper agencies and eliminate special law enforcing organ-

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENT
I hereby announce myself a candidate for the nomination of Sheriff of Jackson County on the republican ticket, subject to the voters of said county at the primaries in May. If nominated and elected I pledge myself and the deputies whom I shall appoint to enforce all laws including the 18th Amendment with efficiency and economy. If you do not want the laws enforced, do not vote for me.
D. A. LYONS, Central Point.

NEWS LETTER

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 26.
—Sachem's Woods, one-time estate of James Hillhouse, Revolutionary soldier and statesman of the early United States, is rapidly being absorbed by new buildings of Yale University, and eventually the entire tract of about two square city blocks will be bounded by college structures, forming a new campus. The latest structure is now rising at Whitney avenue and Sachem street to house Peabody Museum, Yale's natural history collection.

While only a pair of units of this structure are under way now, they stretch a considerable distance on either side and are about to be joined by a large hall of deities. Other units will join on either street, and the time is near when almost the entire Sachem street front of the tract will have buildings on it.

Osborn memorial laboratories, Eage Hall, the new forestry chemical laboratories, and the new Sloane physics laboratory are lined up side by side on the Prospect street frontage. Several acres of land remain vacant in the tract which bears the name of Pierson-Sage Square and is the gift of Mrs. Russell Sage, named in her honor and that of her ancestor, Yale's first president.

Sitting atop the hill, in the center of the square, is the Hillhouse home, still occupied by the last of that family and to be used until he dies, when Yale takes that over also. Mrs. Sage provided that the unbuilt portions of the square shall be opened to the public of New Haven forever. The public's use, however, is restricted to sauntering the paths of the square.

The new Peabody Museum is to contain probably the greatest group of specimens of animal heads and skeletons in the United States as the result of a gift by Thomas D. M. Cardesa of his own collection of game heads, which have just reached the museum. Cardesa, who has an international reputation as a naturalist and big-game hunter, has sent 566 mounted heads and skulls, with horns, together with miscellaneous zoological specimens and an extensive series of implements used by native hunters.

The Cardesa collection was originally in its owner's hunting castle, in Hungary, but at the beginning of the war was brought to this country. Prof. Wesley R. Coo, curator of zoological collections at Yale, says: "Altogether this collection is the most notable of its kind ever brought to America and one which comes at a most opportune time in supplying the peculiar needs of the new museum. It will prove of great importance in future studies."

Cardesa's hunting career started in 1895, in the Maine woods, and after he was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, in 1900, he spent much time hunting in the Rockies, going to Africa in 1903 for his first trip abroad. In those days game was plentiful in the Mount Kenya district of Eastern Africa. Since those days the British Government has placed a limit on bags of jungle animals, just as in this country game birds and fish are limited to the sportsman. As a result of hunting when game was fairly plentiful, Cardesa has in the collection now being set up in New Haven a head of the Greater Kudu, taken on his third trip into Africa. Then the collection ranges from the tiny dik-dik up to a hippopotamus whose mouth measures twenty-three inches between lips.

With the passing of the Hillhouse estate Yale may arrange some other memorial to the original owner. Two memorials are contained in Hillhouse avenue, rated one of the most beautiful streets in New England; and Sachem street, named more from the owner of Sachem's woods than from the estate name, for James Hillhouse, in appearance, resembled an Indian chief and was a civic leader of repute. It was through efforts of Hillhouse that New Haven eventually came to be known as "City of Elms," for he went about what then was a village of 7,000 and with his own hands, planted almost as many elm trees as there were residents here. The trees flourished, some of them still standing, though weak with age, having passed the average life of a century granted an elm tree.
