FEUDIST FINDS LIFE OF PEACE IN WEST

"Nine - Life" Hatfield, Eight Times Shot, Would Save His "Last Life."

CASPER, Wyo., April 28—Tiring of the constant quarrelling and bickering and frequent gun play of the feudists who dwell in the mountain country of Kentucky and West Virginia, Jesse Hatfield, 37, member of the celebrated family of feud fame, has come to the "Wild West" in search of peace and quiet.

Jesse, known as "Nine Life" Hatfield in the hill country, already has "lost" eight of his lives, and decided to live the ninth one away from the center of the Hatfield-McCoy feud, which has raged for more than a half century along the West Virginia-Kentucky boundary line.

It is estimated that the Hatfield-McCoy feud has taken a toll of 283 lives in the two families.

Conflicting reports reaching Hatfield about conditions in the "wild and woolly West," Jesse packed his guns when he left Virginia, but finding the West a comparatively quiet place, he has disposed of his "arsenal."

He doesn't expect to ever carry a gun again—unless, of course, as he explains, he should decide to go back home on a visit.

Fifty-one years have passed since the first blood was spilled in the Hatfield-McCoy feud. Colonel Hatfield is said to have killed Judge McCoy's hound dog, after the dog had bitten the colonel's mount for the second time. When the colonel and the judge met, both are reported to have drawn their pistols and fired, and both dropped dead, and from that day until a total of 283 deaths was reached in the feud, it is related by Jesse Hatfield, not a person has been ambushed or shot in the back.

The most serious battle of the feud occurred in 1909, when forty-four persons were killed. The Casper Jesse Hatfield lost his father, a brother and three cousins in this engagement.

Jesse Hatfield has been wounded some eight times in various outbreaks of the feud. He is a crack shot with a revolver, and it is said of him that he can drive a twenty-penny nail into a plank with a .45-calibre revolver at a distance of fifty feet.

But Jesse is through with quarrels and feud tactics, he says, and craves only peace and quiet, which he believes he has found in the open spaces of Wyoming.

The Art Of Beauty

By B. M. DOUGLAS

The Sparkling Blonde

THE blonde type is the active type, say anthropological experts. The blonde Roosevelt is the go-getter of the world. They are not the somber introspective, nor the languorous sensuous beauties that one finds among the dark haired types. And their gay electric charm proves irresistible to men of many moods and types. The active blonde will cut her hair according to the latest whim of fashion. She will tuck it out because it is as active as she is. Her skin is dazzlingly brilliant and to blend with it she finds the naturelle shade of powder most suitable. She uses Mandarine with its orange tone to give a piquant color to her cheeks and bring a sparkle to the high powdered beam of her eyes. Her lips, small and well turned she emphasizes with a matching lipstick. Her clothes can be extreme. Whatever type she chooses, she may wear the extreme manifestation of it. If she wears a period frock of the Renaissance period, it may be more elaborately decorated than others; if she chooses to dine in a sheathed Egyptian gown, it can be straighter in line and more vividly colored than her more tattered sisters dare to wear. She is the spoiled child of the fashion world; because her coloring is so dazzling that she dominates her gowns and is never submerged by them. The sparkling blonde is a modern incarnation of those fascinating French beauties who live today only in the pages of dusty chronicles—and yet whose names will have the power to conjure up a vision of their charms—Manon Lescaut, Gabrielle d'Estrees, Madame Recamier, whose allure was not so much in the regularity of their features, as in the radiant delicacy of their complexions, their exquisite daintiness, and the magnetism which radiated from them. What and how simple life would be if it were not for that little word by the same token the sparkling blonde must be scrupulously careful about the cosmetics which she uses that these be delicately and carefully made. She will do her beauty shopping carefully and with discrimination. She will choose, for instance, French hand made powders and rouges, because she knows that they are free from grit or roughness and much more delicately blended and perfumed than the machine made compacts. In a word, in all her adjuncts to beauty, she chooses the best, and uses it with a deft light touch. The "scrubbing" with a powder rag or puff adopted by some women is not for the sparkling blonde if she desires to preserve the delicate transparency of her skin.

Visited in Sams Valley—

Mrs. Bertha Cortthell, Miss Dorothy Abbott and Miss Marjorie Cortthell spent the week-end with relatives in Central Point and Sams Valley. They returned home Sunday evening.

Returned to Portland—

C. E. Burgess and M. A. Lungo returned to Portland this morning after spending the past week here looking over the shale holdings and visiting various interesting points around here. They were guests at Hotel Ashland during their stay. V. MacDonald and H. P. Newcombe returned to Portland Sunday.

Progress of Construction—

The erection of the 250 ton re-tort which was commenced last week by the Hartman Syndicate has reached the point where at present the outlet, thrust bearings, lower column, large 18 ft. drive shaft weighing 3 tons, and 3 decks are in place. The Hartman Syndicate is putting up some tables and forms along side of a spring of fresh water for the visitors who wish to take a days outing and take their lunch with them. Everyone will receive a welcome and arrangements have been made to show anyone over the works. Mr. Hartman has taken up his residence on the holdings and will be present at all times and will be glad to give any information that visitors may desire.

Health Hints

by the Father of Physical Culture

BERNARD MACFADDEN

Any fixed rules tend to make exercise monotonous and a bore, soon to be neglected. For this reason it must be spontaneous, and must have variety.

But the parents should see that so far as possible the play exercise is taken under wholesome conditions. Let the children wear rompers, or other clothing which allows full body motion. Much of the playing of younger children will necessarily be indoors, so by all means have an abundance of fresh air and sunlight in the play room. Have exercise bars and other apparatus. If desired and possible and also mats or blankets for floor exercises. A child will be apt to exercise better to music than without it, especially if its parents take the exercises at the same time. For this the phonograph or the radio musical programs are excellent.

A child should not be driven to exercise, but exercise should be made so attractive that he will be eager for it. If the parents will relax from their stiff and decorous posing occasionally to join their children in their fun, the entire family will benefit greatly and that priceless relationship between parents and children—that of pals—will be established.

Parents must be careful, however, that the child, shall not be injured by play of too rough a character, and that it shall not be continued so long as to produce excessive fatigue, nervousness and insomnia, or restlessness at night. For it is a fact that children are rather irresponsible in these matters, and have a tendency to become highly excited in their little games, losing thereby some of the good they might gain from them if they were kept within reasonable bounds.

Excessive fatigue, as is well known, causes an overload of toxic material in the blood-stream, which poisons and irritates the nerves and the brain cells, and influences unfavorably every organ and function in the body.

The sound common sense of the parents will guide them in advising the children, and in exercising an unobtrusive supervision over them in this most interesting phase of their development.

Scene from THE UNINVITED GUEST

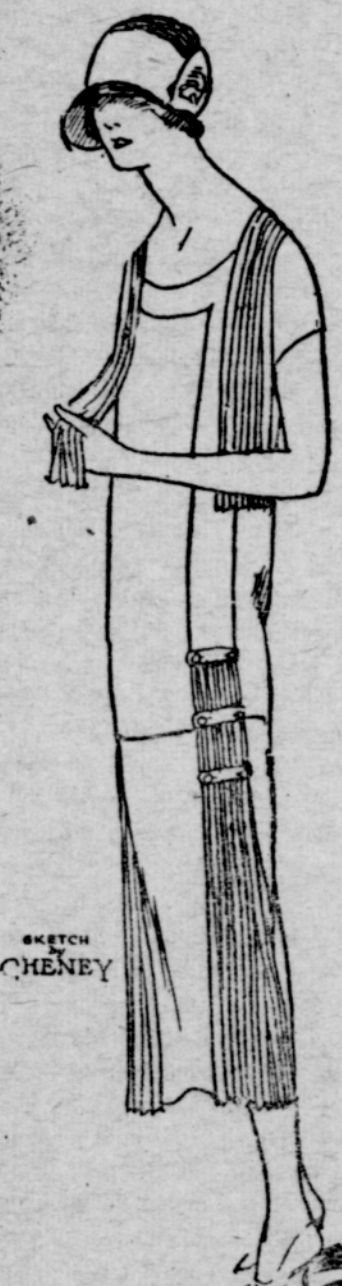

AT THE VINING TODAY, TO MORROW AND THURSDAY

PROBLEM: HOW TO TELL THE LADY FROM THE TREE

If you have, by any stretch of imagination, the figure for it, you should follow the sapling's example in the long lines of your spring and summer clothes. For the new dress is as straight in its contour as a young tree, and all its trimming is vertical. A waist line hardly ever, and if ever, a mere division in the material, instead of a blouse, should be its major characteristic.

The frock in the picture, a new design from the Paris ateliers of Cheney carries out its woodland resemblance by being made of a beautiful pale green and clinging crepe de chine. It confirms the rumour that all skirts will be shorter than last year. 'Much shorter', says Paris, 'even for evening wear. Some very short evening dresses have a long train falling on one side. Some of them are already too short again, which is a sign that the waist line (if it exists at all) will be raised too, nothing being more ungraceful than a very long bodice with a very short skirt.'

This delightful model has a low round neck, encircled by a scarf-like pleated band, loose from the shoulders in front but invisibly caught into a flat pleated collar around the back. The sleeves are very short, set in beneath the collar-scarf. The pleated panels are inserted on either side of the skirt and striped over by narrow bands, with button and real button-hole, of the same material. Being clever the lady salvaged enough of the green crepe de chine to make a band and buckle for her black grosgrain silk hat with its light facing of taffeta.
