WOE TO PARENTS

It may not profit a lot of Oregon parents to read and reflect on the following statement of facts by a paper of the middle west.

Carl Barth, a boy of Greene, Iowa, swallowed poison last Monday, the 16th inst., because his parents did not buy him a high-priced car but offered to get him a cheaper car.

Undoubtedly the truth is that Carl was patted on the back by his mother, and perhaps, by his father, and did as he pleased, generally. This being the case, the parents were to blame for his death.

Girls and boys who are going to the devil today, spending midnight hours in cars by the roadside, these times are not so much to blame as their parents. Parental love outruns common sense and lets the children do as they please until they either commit suicide or fetch up in jail or become fugitives from justice.

It is common nowadays for parents to blame the cars because their daughters turn out bad, or because their boys are going to hell cross-lots, but it isn't the cars, it is the parents. They don't set in early enough to make their children mind.

School superintendents and teachers, who don't enforce obedience, are blamable next to parents, for a lot of the wrong-doing of young people. They are afraid of their popularity or scared of their jobs.

THE MONEY VALUE OF A HIGH SCHOOL EDUCATION TO A FARMER

Many parents living in rural communities are doubtless debating whether they should send the boys and girls who completed the courses in the small district schools last spring to high schools this fall.

The United States Department of Agriculture and the various State agricultural colleges have made a number of investigations of the differences between the incomes of educated and uneducated farmers.

The Department of Agriculture reports a survey of three representative areas in Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, which shows that tenant farmers with a high school education receive an average annual labor income of $526 a year more than the men with only a common-school education.

Cornell University has estimated that a high school education is worth as much to a farmer as $6,000 worth of bonds bearing five per cent interest, and that a college education is worth twice that amount.

THE WATER SITUATION

The dry season, unprecedented according to those in position to know, together with the fact that Ashland is due to add several hundred, if not a few thousand to her population within the next decade, will prove the wisdom of contracting with the Talent Irrigation district for 600 acre feet of water to be used in irrigating acreage tracts.

A FIGHT TO A FINISH

As this is written, Tuesday evening, the democratic convention adjourned at 4:45 with McAdoo and Smith still deadlocked. McAdoo was losing ground and it is a safe prediction that Smith will hit the chutes with McAdoo before tonight and that the much discussed dark horse will emerge with the democratic nomination.

Where is the fellow who predicts a thunder storm following three days of hot weather? Possibly looking for a cooler spot.

The tourist auto camp in beautiful Lithia park reported a population of over 250 Monday night and is still growing. With the issuance of 204 non-resident automobile drivers' permits yesterday, Ashland is becoming a tourist center in fact.

The fact that a 20-year old Japanese boy stripped the flag from the American embassy yesterday at Tokio is not so serious as to precipitate war.

It is refreshing to learn that the democratic delegates have been hitting coffee so strong. Undoubtedly Al Smith's supply of five per cent beer was limited.

It would be tough luck if the old swimming hole went dry.

AN UNUSUAL STRUGGLE FOR AN EDUCATION

During the Civil war I was with the family in my old Illinois home. Like thousands of other patriots my father felt that his duty was at the front. I was the oldest of the boys and upon me devolved the duty of running the farm.

My desire for an education had never forsaken me, so in the fall of 1871, after a summer's employment on a garden ranch at Wagner creek, I concluded to try to "catch up" and came to Ashland for that purpose. A Mr. Fleming was teaching here and after our garden work was done I concluded to try out the new teacher at Ashland and walked from Wagner creek to Ashland each morning and back in the evening, a distance of five miles each way, making ten miles for the round trip.

RAIL SERVICE WILL EMERGE AS ISSUE OF THE CAMPAIGN

WASHINGTON, July 1.—Once the smoke of the national conventions has cleared away, the nation's transportation problem will emerge as one of the issues of the Presidential campaign.

One of the main angles of the problem is the question of freight rates, the farmers and their political representatives declaring that one of the reasons for agricultural distress is the high cost of transportation.

The Esch-Cummins Act is blamed chiefly by those who link the troubles with the railroad situation. In the first session of the 68th Congress efforts were made by the Republican insurgents, supported by the Democrats, to amend the Esch-Cummins Act by abolishing the United States Railroad Labor Board and establishing—or re-establishing—the old plan of voluntary arbitration of railroad labor disputes.

The bill to accomplish this was introduced jointly by Senator Robert B. Howell (R.), of Nebraska, and Representative Alben W. Barkley (D.), of Kentucky. Then insurgents in both the Senate and the House managed to get the bill away from the hostile Committee on Interstate Commerce, but consideration of it came to a prompt and spectacular close in the last week of the session when Barkley withdrew the bill and denounced the House for its attitude toward the legislation.

As this railroad bill will be discussed throughout the Summer and will be one of the first things brought up in Congress this Winter, Senator Howell, at the request of International News Service, has written the following explanation of the provisions of the measure:

Laws Provisions Explained

"The bill provides that it shall be the duty of all carriers and their employees to exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements concerning employment and to settle all disputes arising out of such agreement. There are two kinds of disputes:

"(1) Respecting rate of pay and working conditions. These may be called 'primary disputes.' "(2) Arising out of application of such agreements. These are 'secondary disputes' and may be called grievances.

"For the settling of grievances it is provided that they shall be taken up first in conference between the management and the employees. If an agreement be not arrived at, the grievance may be referred to the local adjournment board provided for in the agreement between the railroad and the employees.

"Suppose that there was a failure of the conference. Then the dispute could be appealed to by a national board of adjustment of fourteen members, seven of whom would represent the railroads and seven the employees. When this board makes a finding, that finding legally binds both parties and thus ends the dispute.

Mediation Is Last Resort

"Should the adjustment board fail to agree because of a tie vote, then the board of conciliation and mediation, composed of five members appointed by the President, steps in and attempts to adjust the matter. If necessary, it urges arbitration by the board consisting of three members—one to be appointed by the railroad, one by the employees and the third by the two so chosen. Should they fail to decide upon the third party, then the board of conciliation and mediation names the umpire.

"A decision of an arbitration board is final and binding. As in the case of a decision of a national board of adjustment, the decision is made a matter of court record with all the force of a court decision.

"In the matter of primary disputes the same course is pursued with this exception: That the next step after conference is mediation, and if unsuccessful then arbitration, the boards of adjustment having nothing whatever to do with the primary disputes."

NEWS LETTER

FORT WORTH, Texas, July 1.

—Although Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., could possibly borrow a pair of his illustrious dad's shoes and struggle through a screen career in the reflection of filial fame, young Doug has visions of gnawing his own aggrandizement out of the cold, unappreciative rock of public acclaim.

On the recent visit to Texas, young Fairbanks was painfully aware that something was lacking in his few embryo productions.

In fact, so convinced was the junior Doug, that borrowed probation could not insure a life ticket that he announced his plans of absorbing the necessary theatrical omniscience from the very soul of dramaturgy—Paris.

For two long years Doug, Jr., contemplates placing his typical Doug, Sr., nose to the grindstone of artificial emotions under the great European masters. The legitimate stage will first claim his acquisitions on his return from abroad after which he will let go a salvo of talent on the screen world—fortified with Shakespearean lore acquired abroad and not a little of the aforementioned filial fame.

Silly superstition is not to be confused with the prophecies of those known to possess uncanny visualization of future events; and Austin, the State capital, conceded to house the leading gray matter of Texas, refuses to be censored for becoming greatly agitated over the prediction of a California woman that the city is to be destroyed by a tornado.

The discomfiting knowledge that this same woman foresaw the dreaded hoof-and-mouth scourge in California before predicting the Austin tornado, did not lend a cooling hand to several thousand feverish Texas brows.

On May 4, 1922, twin tornadoes swept a section of Austin, exacting a death toll of half a dozen persons and inflicting heavy property damage.

Recently the California clairvoyant prophesied a tornado of even greater scope that would completely level the city on May 17. Venerable gray hairs of the Judiciary were said to have grown slightly grayer as the hour of the scheduled cataclysm approached, and it was known that many persons visited other parts of the state who had previously entertained no thoughts whatever of leaving the city.

But Austin still stands. Recommending that the twenty-one-year-old father, whom he characterized as a "society jellybean," transfer some of his grease from his hair to his hands a County Judge here, in delivering a little "fatherly advice" to the defendant in a wife desertion case, gave forth a message to the young manhood of the nation.

The magistrate reminded the youth that the evidence indicated he had deserted his seventeen-year-old wife and a few-month-old baby, pleading lack of sufficient funds to support them; yet a week after leaving his little family, the "jelly" purchased an automobile on the installment plan.

"There is plenty of room on the county road for you 'society jellybeans' who desert loving families and pay $40 installments for an automobile to finale-hop in. Hereafter that $40 monthly goes to your wife and baby, and Proposed Rogue River highway extending from Klamath Falls to Port Orford, by way of Ashland, Medford, and Grants Pass will be located and surveyed this summer.

I'm going to see that some of that grease on your hair appears on give you life to mull over the your hands in your doing it," the jelly bean stuff you've been pulling! Try to get some brains in "Get out of my sight, and your greasy head."
