DAWES ON DOGMATISM

Inasmuch as there has been more or less discussion relative to the address of Chas. G. Dawes, republican candidate for vice-president, on dogmatism, his views on the subject are presented herewith:

"I know you want me to say something, and yet upon such an occasion as this it would be unseemly in me to speak in a partisan manner. But it occurs to me that there is one subject which may be called political, yet is not partisan—a subject upon which all good citizens, whatever may be their party, must agree—and that is the curse of demagoguery in political discussions in this country.

"To such an extent has grown this evil among the politicians of both parties that the real facts and the economic principles involved in questions of national policy continually are obscured by a dense and putrid fog bank of demagogic argument designed simply to forward selfish personal, political and group interests.

"I recently have returned from Europe where I have seen in prostrated industry and human suffering the effects of five years of political prejudices of the various peoples as distinguished from appeals to their reason and common sense.

"To the very brink of the abyss has Europe been brought by this method of treating serious questions involving great elemental and economic principles. To save herself she has abandoned the demagogue and returned to common sense.

"An orgy of demagogism has been running rife in the world and we in the United States are feeling its devastating effects. All good Republicans and all good Democrats who put their country above their party demand the beginning of an era of common sense in public discussions.

"As human beings, whatever may be our party, we are bound to differ on many subjects, but as good citizens we can unite to demand from those who represent us in political debate that they present our differences honestly and from the standpoint of truth—not from the standpoint of passion and prejudice.

"The man who distorts facts—the man who preaches pleasant doctrines to one portion of our people and another pleasant but absolutely inconsistent doctrine to another portion, is a menace to the safety of our fundamental institutions. As good citizens, we must demand from our political leaders a strict adherence to the truth, including disagreeable truth.

"In the campaign which is before me, and as a duty which I owe, not simply to a party but to the citizens of the United States, I pledge myself to adhere to the truth and to the common sense conclusions to be drawn therefrom.

"As to the demagogue, what ever may be his party, I want it distinctly understood that in the coming campaign I ask no quarter and will give none. In this, at least, I know I will have the sympathy of all good citizens, irrespective of party, and I hope our political opponents will follow the same course. Let common-sense reign.

"When this campaign is over, whatever may be the result I want to come back to my home town still holding the respect of my neighbors."

A NATION OF EPICURES

Purveyors of foods seem to have begun a concerted drive on the American stomach. Everywhere is invitation to eat more, accompanied with lusty trumpeting over the merits of various forms of nourishment. The campaign is enlivened with many slogans, each emphasizing the importance of some one food. The eye sees and believes the advertisements, but the works of the stomach are not always equal to the faith of the eye. Stomachs have not yet been standardized, and a considerable irregularity of performance is still to be expected.

Not everyone is in step with the "eat more" campaign—it is time "for calling a halt to the growing procession of slogans that pretend to bring new panaceas for health and nutritive well-being to mankind," says our colleague, the editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association. Modern labor-saving machinery and means of transportation, he explains, have lessened the expenditure of physical energy in the world's work and play—a condition that should reduce food requirements. But it would seem that any gain in leisure is to be absorbed in eating.

Continual practice, perhaps, may develop a nation of epicures. It is unthinkable that our flare for invention will not ease new burdens of the internal economy. We are educated to the conveniences of interchangeable parts for machines. What is there strange in equipping ardent trenchermen with stomach "spares?" Well, if food corporations are to wheedle us into lives of gluttony, let us look to our waistcoat buttons and, if need be, die gamely with our stomachs on.—The Nation's Business.

We pledge allegiance to Velda, queen of the Lithian realm.

The success of the splendid patriotic and industrial parade yesterday was due to the progressive individuals, firms and organizations who sacrificed time and money on their respective floats and the Tidings extends congratulations to each and all.

With the celebration a matter of history our thoughts will naturally turn to the annual vacation.

Bryan always appears in a double role in the democratic convention. One minute he is a pacifier and the next he is tramping on someone's toes, and usually it makes no difference to the great Commoner.

A question in which all are interested: "Will those firms dealing in commodities affected by the recent tax reduction take due notice and give the public the benefit?"

If Nature does not intervene soon in our behalf we may be compelled to import a few California rainmakers.

PREACHER LAYS LEOPOLD'S ACT TO EVIL SPIRIT

SYRACUSE, N. Y., July 3. — "Pietro Artino (Scourage of Princes) and an undeveloped or evil spirit directed the mind and body of Nathan Leopold, Jr., when he planned the diabolical murder of young Robert Franks."

The Rev. Adaline Cooper, pastor of the Lone Star Spiritualistic Church, so declared today.

"Some undeveloped spirit influenced this boy, and the marked similarity between Leopold's features and those of Aretino indicates quite strongly that the Italian's spirit is the one. Pre-natal influence might have something to do with the physical characteristics, however, and it would be interesting to know if Leopold's mother ever read any of Aretino's works.

"Innocent of Crime" "It is also absolutely true that the person under an evil control is innocent of crimes committed and sometimes is not even conscious of his act. Such a condition is called an 'obsession' and explains the thirst for liquor and the lust for murder.

"Young Leob was the subject of Leopold's hypnotic influence and, of course, was directed in that way by the Italian, whose writings seem to have been Leopold's guidebook.

"To my mind a still greater crime will be committed if the State puts to death by legalized murder these two boys, whose greatest mistake was that they were unable to shake off the evil control and had no knowledge of spiritualism, whereby they might have combated the forces of evil"

Pastor Disagrees On the other hand, Dr. Bernard C. Clausen, pastor of the First Baptist Church and a student of psychology, declares the ousting of God from the universe was responsible for the crimes committed by Leob and Leopold. This, and not insanity, lost to the two young Chicago super-intellectuals all sense of moral obligation.

Dr. Clausen says: "The Franks murderers had everything to justify hopes for useful lives — youth, health, wealth, culture, education — but they lacked a sense of the presence of God. They had ruled God out of their universe, and the result is a frightful, fantastic, gruesome crime, not only against God, but against society. If this be insanity there are a number of men in Syracuse who are on the verge of it.

God Sees All "There is an old negro plantation song which has for its words, 'For He sees what you do, and He hears what you say; my Lord am writing all the time!' Here is the picture of a God with eyes mysteriously watching everywhere and ears mysteriously listening for everything—a God who observes the slightest gesture and catches the smallest syllable—a God who has near him a great record book like a plantation ledger, in which He writes with His own hand the story of the failures and successes of his vagrant creatures.

"You may tell me that we have passed beyond such crudities of conception. The inconceivable star-spaces and the infinitesimal revelations of the microscope have spoiled all that.

"You may sneer at a race which could sum up moral responsibility in the terms of a great balance-book and indelible, God-made marks. But the blundering minds which you scorn were sure of one thing — the nearness of God as an inescapable Judge. And there the negro song is clearly and triumphantly right.

Needed Religion "If what we read about the Franks murders is true, we have before the public eye, just now two impressive examples of lives ruined by distance from religion. These young men were well educated, rich, widely read, brilliant students. But, with a gesture of self-confident disdain, they had succeeded in removing God from the boundaries of their mental universe.

"Acts simply lost their moral significance. They retained no realization of the implication of their deeds. They boasted themselves athletes and said, 'Anybody body has the right to pierce a

MILK BECOMING POPULAR AS AN AMERICAN DRINK

CHICAGO, July 3. — America is becoming a nation of milk drinkers. A survey just completed by the National Association of Ice Industries shows that consumption of fluid milk and cream has had a phenomenal rise.

"This is disclosed in reports of boards of Health in all cities and towns," the association declares. "It is also confirmed by latest statistics of the Federal Department of Agriculture, which show that the average consumption in farm and city homes last year was fifty-three gallons, compared with forty-nine gallons in 1921. Last year the average daily consumption for each person was 1.16 pints.

"Surveys have shown carelessness in handling milk in many households. Milk is frequently left standing in a warm room or placed in a window box. Hence bacteria quickly multiply a thousand fold. Milk should be kept clean and cool. Old milk and new should be kept separate. Spoiled, unclean milk means sick babies and children.

"Increased consumption of milk not only means prosperity for the dairy farmer, but proves that the nation generally is awakening to the value of milk in the every-day diet."

ENGLAND GAINS LITTLE FROM GERMAN TOURISTS

LONDON, July 3. — However large may be the numbers of Germans flocking to Italy, Switzerland, France and other countries of continental Europe, and how every lavishly they may be spending money in these places, England as yet is not receiving any great influx of German tourists nor profiting to any noticeable extent from their spending proclivities.

The reason is twofold. First, England will not let them in and, secondly, the Germans do not think England is much of a tourist resort and do not care to come. So far as any commercial invasion of England is concerned, that is regarded as impossible, and the Germans have not even attempted it.

Reports from Italy are that more than 150,000 German tourists have flocked into that country this year, buying extensively and spending lavishly.
