The fact that the factory in itself will afford labor to twenty-five or thirty men is not the only important factor in connection with the proposed project, for once the factory is established and placed in operation the local demand for lumber will be such that many small sawmills will follow, each employing from twenty to thirty men during the greater part of the year. It is not unreasonable to predict that with the box factory under successful operation that within a very few years the combined lumbering industry will employ not less than one hundred and fifty men, exceeding by far the payroll of any other local industry. Thus we have a clean-cut proposition, which has stood the acid test of thorough inspection, guaranteeing eight per cent dividends and backed by sufficient assets to make it sound. This ought to appeal to the man or woman with funds to invest as being far superior to schemes daily offered by strangers.

A GOOD AMERICAN-SOMETIMES

According to his own story, Gus Peterson's program of life consists of working long enough to get money for a first-class drunk, quitting the job and buying poor liquor. When he sobers up he is always without money, tana. In fact two such bands and, being a wanderer, usually is told to "get out of town." Occasionally he gets a short jail sentence.

A few days ago he quit a job with the California-Oregon power company, got drunk in Medford, was fined $15, and still intoxicated, was taken out of the city and told to travel. He came to Ashland, drank some canned heat, and was arrested in the act of tearing down the door of a home that sheltered a terrified widow and two small children.

When sober, Peterson is a quiet, reserved Swede. When drunk, he is a raging beast, a menace to civilization, best quieted with a blackjack. He is typical of almost the entire floating population, a good worker, a good potential American, when he is unable to get liquor.

When prohibition becomes what it was intended to ages insolent. The Indians were be, a law which makes obtaining intoxicants absolutely impossible, there will be more sober Gus Petersons, and the United States will move on a higher plane.

THE GYPSY URGE

Moving day bills make impressive totals. The shift of population in Chicago last year, for illustration, included 367,000 families, say engineers of a gas company. They base their figures on the number of "turn on" orders for gas. If all the families were blessed-or cursedwith worldly goods, and the transfer men levied tribute, say $30 on each move, the moving-van bill would amount to more than $11,000,000.
