"FAMINE TYPE" OF BEAUTY WILL PASS, SAYS FACE EXPERT

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—Men do not like angular women. Extra-thin girls please note.

Also that the "lead pencil" has supplanted the "hour-glass" as the mould of form with disastrous results, according to one specialist in the ways of beauty.

Being fashionably emaciated as to form does not fool people into thinking you young if your face tells an old story.

Face, not form, records the passing of time—in the individual.

But when women are counted not in mournful, but in joyous numbers, forms do show the passing of time—of twenty years, at least—from the reign of the late Lillian Russell down to the tyranny of the "lead-pencil" ideal.

Where are the rolls of fat of yesterday? What has happened to the flesh that used to be the fashion. To the "fine-looking" women, obnoxiously termed? To those gallants of other days who congratulated a friend on "putting on flesh?"

Where are the curves that are now considered a curse? They may return, says Dr. Le Roy Stoddard, famous facial surgeon, who has come to be an authority on beauty in general.

Curves or something worse may be our next fad in forms, because America changes her standards of beauty where many other countries are sewed up for eternity on their pulchritude platform planks.

For instance, on flat—in parts of the Far East—or on red hair, which we regard as beautiful, and which many races consider a disgrace, or even on double chins, which are not chic, locally.

"Anything may happen to women's looks in future," Dr. Stoddard began. "Look what happened to the old-fashioned bathing suit. Then think of what happened to the old-fashioned figure inside of it. I don't mean that I like the exaggerated 'hourglass' type of twenty years ago, but I do think—

"The modern thinness is simply terrible," he explained. Skeletons and Elephants The family skeleton of today is the debutante daughter.

To weigh 100 pounds is her ambition. She has little sympathy with her predecessor, the girl of twenty years ago, who was the family's white elephant.

She would rather be called fat than fat.

Don't blame her when she refuses white bread and sweets. She is merely the willing victim of the nation's changed beauty standard.

Dr. Stoddard continues: "If such a great change in outlines and in customs as that could take place in a few years, think what can happen to women in the future!

"Yet you never find a 'skinny' girl winning a beauty contest, not on a beach anyway. The rail type is far from beautiful, although certain famous beauties often reduce themselves to that state.

"But peculiar things come to be considered beautiful. People think fashion is beautiful no matter what it imposes on them. It is the vogue to be thin—then to be thin is beautiful, say what you will.

Face Reflects Youth "Young women now twenty to thirty come in to have their faces lifted. A few years ago my patients were over forty for the most part. Fat hangs down the sides of these young cheeks, sagging skin where plumpness has been reduced.

"A full face does not wrinkle. You know, if you have a swelling on your hand, for instance, the skin becomes tight and smooth. When the swelling goes down the skin wrinkles.

"The face alone shows youth. The women who starve and ruin their health reducing cannot look young if the face looks old. I had a patient who was sixty-four and of slim figure, but her face showed her age.

"Think of the difference between the Lillian Russell silhouette and the lead pencil of today. I don't care for the over-plump figure of former days, yet I cannot admire the famine victim type of now.

Moderation Vindicated "We never used to see feminine anatomy except in the old leg shows which were not considered nice to attend. Now they wear bathing suits with tights so short you can't see them. Twenty-five years ago only men patrons of burlesque were allowed to see such horrible sights as legs! Now anyone can look."

So moderation still holds good as a rule in all things, even fashions and figures.

WORK COMMENDS FIELD SERVICE

Secretary Work of the Interior Department and Commissioner of Reclamation Mead have commended the personnel of the Reclamation Field Service for faithful performance of duty in connection with the operation of Reclamation projects under adverse conditions. The joint letter of appreciation follows:

"This season has in many ways offered more obstacles to the successful administration of reclamation projects than any since the Reclamation Act was passed. To the financial distress of settlers and the critical attitude which this has engendered there has been added the difficulties and losses which have come from drought, hail, and insect pests. All of these have combined to make the position of those charged with the administration of these works and the delivery of
