Henry Enders, president of the Kiwanians, gave short talks assuring the Copco officials that Ashland had the friendliest feelings toward the California-Oregon Power company. Paul McKee responded, saying that the interest shown by the Ashland boosters in the Copco's project was inspiring to them and would assist them to carry on their work to greater successes.

A song toast was given by Chef Charley, Superintendent Cormack and other Copco officials by the Lithian Octette and then a large crew of workmen at the site were given the mess hall. The Octette gave them several songs, also.

Following, the party hiked across the hills to the point where the first tunnel comes out on the other side. The tunnel plan is very novel, there being two tunnels connected by a large siphon which carries the water from a point just below the Copco plant No. 1 to the new site farther down the river.

In order to hasten the work on the second tunnel, an addit, or sub-tunnel was driven into the side of the mountain about half way between the two ends, and in this center location two crews are working, in addition to the crews on each end, which makes four crews working on this one tunnel nearest the new plant site.

The water at the head of the tunnel, furthest up the river is to be diverted from the river into the tunnel by a dam across the stream. At this point, and also at the new plant site huge rock-crushing plants have been constructed, as the company will thus be able to manufacture all the sand and rock for the cement work.

From the river to the level of the main Copco plant there is a steep incline and a tramway has been constructed up the side of the mountain. When given their choice of riding up the tram or hiking it up the river, many of the party preferred the hiking. Then the main plant was inspected. This was completed in 1922, but many of the visitors had not seen it. The huge dam, impounding water to the depth of about 120 feet in the Klamath River and the generating plant with the huge turbines provided very interesting.

One of the points of interest is the dedication tablet on the dam, which reads: "Copco Power Plant, Dedicated to Public Service. The embodiment of broad vision; abiding faith; unflinching devotion; steadfast courage; consummate skill; masterful leadership and faithful toil. 1918-1922." It is said that the difficulties encountered in the construction of the huge dam project inspired Mr. McKee of San Francisco, father of Paul and Donald McKee, who are actively connected with the management of the corporation, to write this inspirational message. The visitors, tired out by the unusual amount of hiking but feeling happy, then gathered at the guest house and enjoyed songs, and refreshments brought to them by the hosts, while they waited for the railroad train to take them back to their waiting automobiles. The train had suffered a wreck, but in short time it arrived and the party started down the hill toward Thrall. In the gathering dusk, the trip was one of the most enjoyable parts of the day, especially when part way down Mount Shaasta, snow-capped and with twilight darkening the eastern slopes and the fading sun illuminating the western slopes of California's famous mountain, came into view.

As the train pulled into Thrall, a huge bonfire was roaring and everybody gathered around this preparatory to starting the drive homeward. Needless to say everybody felt duly appreciative of the splendid hospitality which had been extended them by the Copco officials.

NEAR EAST WORKER HAS HAD SEVERAL THRILLING TIMES

Held a prisoner for three weeks by the Turks in Cilicia and facing death from the plague on the eastern coast of the Black Sea in adult years, going as a bride to India, there to share her last crust with the starving thousands during great famines, remaining in India until she was carried out on a stretcher; these are only a few of the experiences of Mrs. Rambo of Portland, who was a visitor in Ashland last week. To this woman have come more experiences and more tests of character than come to the average of us in a dozen life-times. Men and women of her spirit have made the name America a synonym for all that is generous and unselfish throughout the world.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Rambo reached the city of Damoh, in the Central Province in India, in '91. Their three sons were born in India. Shortly after their arrival one of India's periodic famines broke out and thousands of children were desolate. With funds contributed from America the Rambo's, although without experience in relief or orphanage work, put the homeless people to work building homes for the children.

AMERICAN HEROINE

and took the children as fast as funds would allow, although not so rapidly as the orphans flocked in.

Last year their oldest son, Victor, returned as a medical missionary to the spot where he was born. Now his frequent letters tell that his closest associates, leading men in their communities, were children with whom he played in the orphanages in India. "They never cease talking of you, whom they claim as their mother as much as I do, and they have just as good cause," he writes, "for while you gave me life, you saved theirs."

Finally, after thirteen years of service in an enervating climate, with insufficient food, the strain became too much for Mrs. Rambo and with her husband and sons, she returned to this country.

Five years ago, when Mr. Rambo was minister of the Christian Church in Baker, they listened to Rev. J. J. Handsaker, Northwest Regional Director of the Near East Relief, appeal for workers for the Near East.

"You need not tell us anything about starving children," they said, in asking for an appointment to the Near East. "We have had them die in our very yard, in India." "And," said Mr. Rambo, with an affectionate smile at his wife, "I have often had to shake this girl to make her eat enough." "How can I eat with those starving children outside?" "You must eat," I said, "or otherwise we can't serve them." Arrangements were soon made by which the Rambo's were to sail for the Near East, which they reached in August, 1918.

In the midst of some of the most beautiful scenery in the world in the famous mountains of Cilicia, a few miles from the birthplace of the Apostle Paul, Mr. and Mrs. Rambo were placed in charge of an orphanage which had been run by the Germans before the war.

"We are sending you to Harounieh," stated C. V. Vickrey, Secretary of the Near East Relief, "because it is a quiet place, and we are sending younger workers to places of danger."

That Harounieh was not exactly a "bed of roses" was shown by the fact that within a few weeks of the Rambo's arrival, great massacres were perpetrated within a few miles of them, and the Turkish army besieged Har-ounieh. "I can never forget a letter which Mr. Rambo wrote during the time of the siege," states Mr. Handsaker, who also was in Ashland last week. "I might as well write, for there is nothing else I can do. The bullets are whistling by as I write. A few sentences farther down he said, 'Bang! There goes the cream pitcher.'"

This lasted for days, but finally the French drove off the Turks and the children escaped after a long march to the railroad and a trip in cattle cars to Mersino and out to the Isle of Cyprus.

After this "quiet" experience, the Rambo's returned to Constantinople, awaiting a vessel to bring them home, when the Greek government appealed to the Near East Relief to help send home fifty thousand Greeks stranded on the beach at Batoum, on the east coast of the Black Sea. So intense was the suffering here, that when the Rambo's attempted to give away American clothing in an orderly fashion they were mobbed by the frenzied people and soldiers were called to rescue the Americans.

For eight months the Rambo's were doctors, undertakers, nurses, comforters; in fact everything to the fifty thousand people whom they were loading into ships as fast as the Greek government could send them. Finally, all the survivors were on their ships starting for Greece, and the Rambo's returned to Constantinople, and then to America, with the personal thanks of the Queen of Greece and with the undying affection of the multitudes whom they had saved from otherwise certain death. "We had no thought of coming West when reached New York," stated Mrs. Rambo. "We came just to help for a little while in raising funds and then get back again. However, we found that Mr. Rambo's health had been so undermined that it was impossible for us to return. Near East germs
