REFUSES TO REVEAL BOOTLEGGERS' NAMES

PARIS, Nov. 22—"He knows them all," declared Maitre Pierre Gide, counsel for Jerome Max Phaff, alleged American bootlegger and pirate, in refusing to divulge the names of the rum-running ring leader in the United States with whom he claims his client is intimate.

M. Gide, who returned to Paris from Brest where Phaff was held in prison pending a resumption of the hearing before a maritime tribunal, refused to discuss reports that Phaff had cabled District Attorney Hayward in New York, offering to turn state's evidence in a big booze smuggling expose in return for Hayward's assistance in getting him out of the piracy charge here.

"Phaff is not a pirate," M. Gide insisted. "But he is a smuggler and an associate of smugglers, and as such knows everything about rum-running operations along the American coast. But this piracy charge has been framed against him."

During October, nine Oregon cities, with 327,755 population in 1920, issued $3,415,151 building permits. Nine Washington cities, population 626,680, issued permits for $3,123,309.
