DECEMBER 19
I SHALL NOT WANT:—The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. . . Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever.—Psalm 23:1, 6.

A WORTHY CREED

Although it has been widely published, "The American's Creed," adopted by Congress in 1919, is not as well known to the citizens of the country as it should be.

This creed was selected through a contest, open to all Americans, for the purpose of securing "the best summary of the political faith of America." The author of the successful manuscript was Wm. Tyler Page, a descendent of President Tyler.

The phrases composing it are taken from the Preamble and the Constitution of the United States, the Declaration of Independence, the Oath of Allegiance and from utterances of distinguished patriots, all woven together into a complete and lofty sentiment, as follows:

"I believe in the United States of America as a Government of the people, by the people, for the people; whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign states; a perfect union, one and inseparable; established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

"I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it; to support its Constitution; to obey its laws; to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies."

WIDOWED, BUT A MOTHER

A mother, in Chicago, comes into court to declare that her son did not kill his father; the killing was accidental.

The son came home drunk from a "party." There was a sabre in the room. There was a scuffle over the sabre. The father is dead. The son is in jail, presumably sober by this time.

The husband is dead. The son is living. The mother is still a mother. The wife is now a widow.

She says the son did not do it. It was an accident. Who did it?

How about the permission that was given, by each of us, in our several ways, for this son to get drunk?

NATIONS AND WORLD RIGHTS

One of the things that is frequently forgotten in talking of such controversies as the Egyptian questions, is that the theory of nationality utterly prevents the handling of the dispute in a way that fits the facts.

We have managed to reduce the most of our world problems to terms of "nationality." All the territory of the world is divided among "nations." Nations, thus, have definite areas. They exercise sovereign jurisdiction. If a nation is encroached upon, it is a violation of this jurisdiction. And if any nationality is to be diminished, it can be legally diminished only by the annexation or the conquest or the voluntary merging of one nation into another.

And yet these are not the facts at all. It is not a fact that the Suez canal is an integral part of the Egyptian "nation." It is not a fact that Sudan is a part of "Egypt." It is not a fact that in handling the Suez canal, it is necessary for the British to encroach upon Egyptian nationality.

And yet, the people of England have no way to think of managing the upkeep and the safety of the canal except by controlling Egypt. And the people of Egypt have no way of thinking about running their own affairs except by running the canal, and by running the Sudan. Each is a part of the Egyptian "nationality."

We have no provision for the handling of world interests, as such.

The world does have interests, that are separate from those of individual nations. We are finding that out, in bitter lessons, no matter what we may think of the league of nations, or of a world court.

The British empire, as the custodian of the Suez canal, has taken upon itself responsibilities, which it cannot avoid, by any recognition of Egypt. The United States, by the building of the Panama canal, and by the encouragement of trade through it, has taken upon itself responsibilities, which cannot be evaded by hiding behind any theory of nationality. Theodore Roosevelt knew this when he helped in the foundation of the Panama republic.

And yet it is impossible for statesmen not to think, and to act, in terms of nationality. Any change from that method of thinking will have to be accomplished slowly.

It is in the international schools like conferences and congresses and conventions, world courts and tribunals, that the methods of a world organization will be worked out.

Until that time, we will have to go on bluffing about the rights of "nations" when we actually consider other human rights ahead of them.

YALE TELESCOPE WILL STUDY STARS IN SOUTH AFRICA

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 19.—Eleven tons of telescope (in parts) will leave here December 27 for Cape Town, South Africa, following two weeks after the departure of Dr. Frank Schlesinger, director of Yale University's astronomical observatory, who is to weld the eleven tons into one instrument on some South African height, where for the next ten years it will be used in observation of stars of the Southern Hemisphere, to secure data long desired by astronomers.

The telescope, fourth largest on earth, but "the most efficient one known," is so arranged that it moves five-eighths of an inch in four minutes and makes a complete revolution each twenty-four hours. Despite its eleven tons of weight, the instrument can be directed at any point in the heavens by hand.

Yale undertook to build the telescope when her astronomers indicated a desire to determine the distances of more than 1,000 stars visible only in the Southern Hemisphere, and to determine the proportionate motion of a very large number of faint stars.

South Africa was determined upon for the site of the observatory undertaking the work because of atmospheric conditions there. "More important even than weather," says Dr. Schlesinger, "is the steady atmosphere for which that section of the world is famous."

Johannesburg and Blumfontene stand as most likely to receive the telescope. Dr. Schlesinger will decide that when he reaches South Africa. When the proposed ten-year task is ended one of two present proposals will have been adopted for the future use of the telescope. One is to keep it there as an African observatory feature. Yale to make the observatory permanent. The other is to send the outfit back to New Haven for Yale to use in her home observatory.

Lenses of the great telescope cost $21,000. The frame cost $18,000. Instead of having the construction of the frame done outside, Yale did her own work in a special factory erected on the observatory grounds. That cut the cost from the more than $100,000 first estimated. Then the whole affair was moved downtown to the Mason Mechanical Laboratory of the university,

Heredity or Appetite? Here's Problem in Mice

LONDON, Dec. 19.—Sir E. Sharpley Hafer, physiologist of international fame, speaking before learned scientists at the annual dinner of the Royal Society, said it had been proved that mice are strongly affected by heredity.

He declared trained mice come for food at the ringing of a bell.

The first generation of mice came at 100 rings, but the second generation came at fifty rings and the third at twenty rings.

Frye's Delicious Ham

no more delightful way to spread Christmas cheer

"Christmas comes but once a year" and thousands of Northwest housewives make their plans for the festive board from their experience throughout the other twelve months.

Those who give their families the all-year-round treat of Frye's "Delicious" Ham, know that it never varies in quality—and they have found its unusual goodness and delightful mild flavor so appetizing that it will surely occupy an important place on many holiday menus.

In no way can you better prepare for the unexpected guest than by baking a butt of a Frye's "Delicious" Ham just as you would a fresh pork roast, using powdered cinnamon, cloves, mustard and brown sugar. Use a covered roaster with enough water to make steam. The young, tender pork of Frye's "Delicious" Ham requires only fifteen minutes' baking to the pound.
