Lost Girl Decides to Stay Lost

Suspicious Parents, She Says, Make Home Life Unbearable for Modern Daughters

By the Editor of SMART SET

RECENTLY some friends in a small town wrote to me and asked me to look up a girl who had left home and come to New York. I did. She told me why she had left home—because mother was so suspicious of me and kept picking at me all the time.

"Perhaps if you tell me what happened," I said to the girl, "it will help parents and daughters to get together."

"Here are some of the things the girl told me, taken from the full story of why she left home and wouldn't go back, as I have related it in January SMART SET:

"Everything was all right until the boys got to coming around to see me and take me out, but after that it was awful. Mother was terribly straight-laced and didn't approve of drinking, which I heard was because Dad was a good deal of a sport in his younger days. So she nearly threw a fit when I came home from a little party one night and she smelled liquor on my breath. It was a frightful scene.

"I hadn't been what you'd call really drinking. Not the way some of the boys and girls I went with did. I'd only had one sip out of a flask, and not a very big sip at that, because the stuff nearly gagged me. The trick we girls—some of us—learned, was to go through the motions of taking a big gulp out of a boy's flask without really swallowing any of the stuff at all. They'd have been sore, of course, if we had refused to drink with them—they would have thought we were trying to play safe or something and spoil the party. Almost all girls start by doing things just to keep from being spoil-sports.

"I'd a thousand times rather be having a good time at home than having it away from home. People who do things that are wrong, always get hurt. Maybe I did wrong when I ran away, but here's a funny thing: I don't drink any more than I did when I was at home, I smoke less, because I don't have to sneak a smoke.

"I'm lonely here, in spite of being able to go when I please and where I please. I haven't got a soul that I really mean anything to.

"So you see what I mean? We daughters may seem intolerant, but aren't our parents just as intolerant?"
