Health Hints
by the Father of Physical Culture
BERNARR MACFADDEN

With the coming of old age appear neuralgia, and other nervous disorders—like anemia and liver troubles (and the liver is one of the organs that have most to do with health)—dyspepsia, loss or increase of flesh, and many other disorders. Thus the preservation of youth and health becomes in large measure a question of diet—the partaking of foods that will neutralize and dissolve the calcareous matter in the system as well as build up the tissue.

The first process of digestion is salivation, which is induced by the act of mastication. You must chew your food. Never think that you can chew it too much—it will always be the other way. You must eat slowly, must not eat when exhausted, nor immediately after or just before exercise or bathing. Mastication greatly lightens the work of the stomach. Thorough mastication gives perfect assimilation.

You have been using your stomach ever since you were born; it is high time that you give it consideration. The best way to do this is to learn to masticate the food you eat. You may rest assured that the stomach will repay you a hundred fold in increased health and strength. Do not stuff it with foods that irritate; give it a rest from high-seasoned foods and liquors. And above all never put a second meal into it before the first is digested.

Young persons require more food in proportion than older ones, because the body, which does not reach maturity until about the age of twenty-four makes greater demands while growing than at a later period. There is a gradual reduction in the quantity of food required, especially of meat, thereafter throughout life. Climate, too, has much to do with food requirements. Much less food is necessary and less is desirable in summer than in winter weather. There is no better diet for the hot months than all kinds of vegetables and vegetable salads, with an olive oil dressing. In the winter months an increase of oils, fats, starchy food and other carbohydrates is required.

It is not so much quantitative as qualitative discrimination that constitutes the secret of dieting.

"WHITE INDIANS" SHIVER AND GO

NEW YORK, Jan. 13. — On the snow-covered decks of the liner Essequibo, just before she sailed for South America, two "White Indians" stood blinking and shivering.

They were Marguerite, the elder, and her thirteen-year-old brother, Ole. They are of the San Blas Indians. It was the first snow these inhabitants of innermost Panama had ever seen. The children, their parents, Chief Jim Barry and his wife, and several other members of their tribe are being taken back to their homes by R. O. Marsh, an explorer, who brought them here for scientific purposes last July. Marsh said scientists are agreed that the children are not Albinos, but are the result of mutation. He added:

"The white race of today is an offspring of the brown peoples

Water Pipe Line Laid at Bottom of Lake

WHITEHALL, N. Y., Jan. 12. — To obtain a new water supply, Whitehall, a village in the Adirondacks completed a unique pipe line system in which water is passed under water.

The pipe line is laid at the bottom of South Bay, an arm of Lake Champlain, about a mile wide. The water is brought from Pine Lake in the foothills 800 feet above the little village.

The project, for which Edward F. Roche, editor and publisher and Mayor of Whitehall, led the movement, cost the village $300,000.
