KEEP THE GAME COMMISSION

There is a proposal at Salem, initiated by the governor, to abolish the state game commission and turn over its affairs to Oregon Agricultural college for administration.

The function of the game commission is dual. It maintains the supply of fish and game for Oregon sportsmen by artificial propagation and it protects fish and game from unlawfully excessive destruction.

So much for the showing as to activities of the game commission within the past year. It is shown that work has been done which is of value to and in the interest of Oregon sportsmen.

Oregon Agricultural college is an educational institution, and its chief function is and should be educational. To turn over the game department to the college would be to engage it in a line of work far afield from its intended one.

It is quite likely that the conduct of the game commission and its work have not been in all respects perfect. Some of its acts may be open to question.

Our game laws are absurd and place a premium upon slaughter. The trout season opens in the midst of the spawning season and continues all year around in coast streams.

"We permit the slaughter by everyone of 25 ducks a day, five times as many as should be allowed, and most of our other bags are as absurd. With 85,000 hunters in the field, the slaughter can be imagined."

THRIFT

(By R. J. Kirkwood, in Thrift Talk)

Thrift is a much abused word, in fact it has become so common-place that it has lost much of its real meaning.

We speak of a man as thrifty, if, on some occasions we find him exercising economy, or if a man seeks to better his condition, energetically applying himself to his tasks, or in seeking more lucrative employment, we say he is thrifty, but these are only symptoms.

Many a man has started out on New Year's day with a high resolve to save money. He cuts out two for a quarter cigars and smokes his pipe. Instead of trading in the old car on a new one as he had intended to do he decides to put up with the rattles of the old hack for another year.

This association is not only trying to help its members practice thrift, but is trying to teach them the habit of thrift. We are not asking people to deny themselves the use of their own money, but are urging them to accumulate their money, a little here and a little there, putting the money to work 24 hours a day, while they work only eight, so that their small change will become an ally instead of an aggravation.

One thing is self-evident, if we do not save during our productive years, we will have nothing when our productivity is gone, for the time comes when no man can labor.

THE DRIFT

Its operative department has reported to the Chicago crime commission that crimes in that city are "an indication that criminals operate without interruption in any part of the city that they choose."

About the same time the governor of New Jersey, impressed by the tidal wave of lawlessness, appeals in his message to the legislature for more vigor in law enforcement.

About the same time a New York judge rebuked a jury for its verdict acquitting a notorious criminal.

Another judge asserted that New York is rapidly becoming a dumping ground for criminals of all kinds.

Another judge protested against pardons and paroles for dangerous men.

A governor of Kansas is accused of selling pardons and paroles.

Any day reports of daring robberies or of murder are printed in the newspapers.

A school to train men how to alter ballots and thereby control elections was unearthed in an Eastern state.

In the list is a Los Angeles murder, with the McCoy verdict.

There is a mere glance at what is going on. The list could be lengthened until it would fill a newspaper page. There has been nothing to equal it or approximate it in American history.

When will an aroused public sense the drift of the times? When will it rise in its own defense and insist that the laws of society be respected, require criminals to be put in jail and kept there, and demand that old-fashioned honesty and integrity once more take precedence as national and personal virtues?

If it doesn't, will gang leaders gain the mastery for which they are struggling, and crookedness and crime be the real rulers of the land?

A California seismologist predicts an earthquake will follow the sun's eclipse, January 24th. Nobody pays any particular attention to this prediction, feeling that the earthquake may come some place else, but not in the particular sphere of the thinker.

The usual crop of legislative idiocies is sprouting at Salem; but, thank goodness, even in this land of prolific growth, not many of these idiocies will blossom into a law.

The work of the high school students in handling Saturday's issue of The Daily Tidings proved that Ashland Hi has several real newspaper builders of the future.

BULLET SQUEEZED FROM HEART; LIVES

CHICAGO, Jan. 19. — Although your heart stops functioning, you may still live!

At least this is true in the case of Max Peck. Surgeons at the County Hospital here cut open his chest, took his heart in their hands, used pressure enough to force a home-made bullet from the organ, stopped its beating for a few moments and then restored it to its place.

Peck may recover and once again be just as sound as though he had never attempted to commit suicide on Christmas Eve in a cheap lodging house.

When the terrible loneliness that overwhelms a man utterly alone in a cheap lodging house on Christmas Eve came to Peck, he had no weapon. But to a man determined to end it all that is no hindrance.

A piece of lead pipe was secured, as well as some black powder. And Peck had a spike for a bullet. The home-made cannon was placed on a table and set off with a hot wire. When Peck awoke he found himself in the hospital, hovering between life and death.

Surgeons at the hospital counseled an operation. Apparently it has turned out a success.
