SOME OVERPAY IN RETURNS ON THEIR INCOME TAX BILLS

PORTLAND, Feb. 4.—From an examination of returns already filed, Clyde G. Huntley, collector of internal revenue, finds that in computing their federal income tax for 1924 a great many taxpayers are not taking advantage of the 25 per cent reduction in tax account of "earned income" to which they are entitled and, consequently, are remitting to this office a greater tax than they owe the government.

"The 'earned income' provision of the 1924 law is an entirely new feature and was not included in any of the previous revenue acts," explained Collector Huntley today. "The term 'earned income' is defined as consisting of wages, salaries, professional fees and other amounts received as compensation for personal services rendered, but does not include dividends received from corporations.

"Briefly, the law provides that if the taxpayer's net income is not more than $5000, his entire net income shall be considered to be earned net income, and if his net income is more than $5000, his earned net income shall not be considered to be less than $5000. In no case shall the earned net income be considered to be more than $10,000.

"Application of the 'earned income' credit in computing the tax of an individual is shown in the following example: A is a married man having a net income of $4000. Deducting his personal exemption of $2500, A's normal tax at 2 per cent on the remaining $1500 would be $30. In addition, however, A is allowed a credit of 25 per cent of this amount account 'earned income' or $7.50, so that his correct tax is only $22.50 instead of $30 as originally computed.

"Take the case of B, an unmarried man, with the same net income: Deducting his personal exemption of $1000, B's normal tax at 2 per cent on the balance, $3000, would be $60. But he, too, is entitled to the credit of 25 per cent account 'earned income' which reduces his tax to the extent of $15, so that he actually owes the government a tax of $45 instead of $60.

"Another example: A, who is married, has a net income of $5000. After deducting his personal exemption of $2500, the normal tax on the remaining $2500 would be $50, less credit of 25 per cent, or $12.50, so that his actual tax is $37.50. With the same income, B, unmarried, would have a normal tax of $80 ($5000 less $1000 personal exemption, or $4000 computed at 2 per cent) and from this amount he applies an 'earned income' credit of 25 per cent, or $20, reducing his actual tax liability to $60.

"In case A's net income consisted of salary $4000, interest on bank deposits $1000, profit from sale of stocks $1500, dividends $1000, he can compute his 'earned income' credit of 25 per cent on a maximum of $5000 only.

"Assuming A's only income was his salary amounting to $12,000, he can compute his 'earned income' reduction on only $10,000, which is the maximum amount allowed under the law for computing the 25 per cent credit deduction.

"Another example: A's income consists of salary $7200, interest on bank deposits $800, stock dividends $2400, profit from sale of real estate $1200. He can compute his 'earned income' credit deduction of 25 per cent only on his salary of $7200 which is the only portion of his income that comes within the meaning of 'earned income' as defined in the law.

"Under the 1924 revenue act, a very substantial saving is effected in the amount of income tax the moderate salaried man and wage earner must pay. In the first place, the rate of tax as compared to the rates in the 1921 act has been cut in two and, in addition, the taxpayer is permitted to apply a 25 per cent reduction of the normal tax after it has first been computed at the reduced rate. For illustration: A, married, had a net income of $4000 in 1923. Deducting his personal exemption of $2500, he paid a tax of 4 per cent on the balance, less of course, the refund of 25 per cent later voted by Congress. On the same net income for 1924, A's tax would be 2 per cent on $1500 ($4000 less personal exemption of $2500) or $30, which is still further reduced by the 25 per cent 'earned income' credit deduction, or $7.50 leaving his actual tax $22.50."
