TITLES AND EMINENCE

If international relations were more sensitive than they actually are and as sensitive as they are often supposed to be, the chance remark of Secretary of State Hughes about the honors of Elihu Root, "the nearest approach that we can make in this country to the gift of an earldom," might be made the occasion of international inquiries.

It is an unsolved puzzle to Americans to understand why British citizens of such eminence as Herbert H. Asquith should make such a fuss about getting to be "earl of Oxford". We can easily understand why William E. Gladstone might be indifferent to being made a "lord". and we are puzzled when we learn that he did it to be "peculiar", rather than as a matter of course. We realize that, whatever may be thought today or tomorrow of the Gladstone statesmanship. William E. Gladstone, a commoner, will remain for generations an eminent man in British history, while his son, who became a "lord", solely through the fact that he was his father's son, was a light-weight shallow weakling, who attempted to carry on his family name without having the family talents, and is already forgotten. Being a peer satisfied his vanity for the time being.

In this respect, there is no difference whatever between British and American basis of popuar recognition. "Lords" are quite too common in Great Britain to make it any distinction to belong to the House of Peers, and such squabbles as the present one over the right of Mr. Asquith to be "earl of Oxford" but show that at the best Asquith would honor the title rather than the title honor Asquith. and yet Asquith will probably be heartbroken if he does not become the "earl of Oxford."

There is one angle of this title-for-great-men procedure that American men active in public life would appreciate; perhaps some Britishers do. The man in England who accepts a title has at once, no matter how well he is known, to earn a new reputation. When, for instance, a nan named "Smith," some years ago became active in British life, he had to fight for his name. "Smith" was not as easy to put over as "Asquith" or "Balfour." But he made good at it. As Frederick E. Smith he was an Oxford debater, a lecturer in modern history, an eminent barrister, a member of parliament, solicitor general and attorney general. When he became lord high chancellor, he distinguished himself in action entered the House of Lords, and selected as his baronial against the Spanish forces at Mathe last six years, as "Lord Birkenhead," he has had to make himself known anew to his nation and the world. This was a loss of advertising value of serious importance to a politician. When you once make good as "Smith", it .Editor is a loss to become even so peculiar as "Birkenhead."

NEW FARM AUTHORITY

Jardine, as secretary of agriculture in the President's cabinet, is an obviously good appointment. The new head 1.95 of the nation's official farm interests himself makes a 7.59 showing of being a "dirt" farmer, as he lived and worked on farms in Idaho and Montana until he was grown. At the same time he has that professional training, as well as 3.5) wide contacts with larger farmer interests that actually give him the confidence of organized farmers. He is now president of the Kansas college of agriculture at 46 years of age. He is a graduate of the farm college of Utah. He has had that sort of professional contact with farmers' problems in his capacity as lecturer to farmers in many states that gives him the point of view not of one man on one farm but of many men on many farms.

It will be of/special interest to us that he is a "Westerner." We are perhaps naturally suspicious of the sort of farm that is different from ours. We in the Far West would be specially suspicious of the Massachusetts type of farmer, where the producer is working at the consumers' backdoor and to whom transportation problems are a minor factor. To the man in the West the railroads may be a friend or an enemy; they can never be an element to be neglected. And then the Westerner has a feeling about This newspaper prides itself upon keeping up to water that no Easterner can have. Mr. Jardine has bred date, down to the minute and abreast of the times. The gift campaign, according to the decision of the directors of the holding company, will have three phases between now and spring. Both the alumni efforts and the fine arts building campaign will be prosecuted. The student body of the University will put on a campaign to add subscriptions of all unpledged undergraduates to the student union fund. Last year in a whirlwind campaign of a week $200,-000 was pledged. Campaigners in the spring will obtain subscriptions from this year's freshman class and other students.

The Duchess of York, wife of the second son of the British rulers, exceeded even her titled husband's record on their present hunting trip in British East Africa, bringing down an immense rhinoceros with one shot. Congressman Nicholas Longworth, of Cincinnati, O., is said to be assured of election as Speaker of the next House of Representatives by the action of a caucus of the Pennsylvania delegation in voting to support him. Dr. Wilhelm Marx, former Chancellor of the German Republic, has been elected Premier of Prussia by the Prussian Diet. Two persons were killed and 100 injured in Marseilles, France, when Communists attempted to break up a meeting of the Catholic Party presided over by General de Castelnau, commander of one of France's field armies in the World War.
