which has hundreds of auto supply stores in the west. Next to this location on Main street will be another storeroom, which it is understood has not been leased as yet. In the rear of the Weimer building big changes are also being made, including the construction of a machine shop at the rear of the basement, while at the rear of the two storerooms on Main street there will be a large garage, connected with Third street by an inclined driveway. In the front of the basement there will be offices, with an entrance from main street. A front entrance is also to be constructed to the lodge rooms on the upper floor of the building. A. L. Lamb has the contract for this work.

With all of this construction, remodeling and changing East Main street will present a busier and prettier appearance later.

COLLINS WENT INTO CAVE AT BAD TIME OF SEASON, EXPERT

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, Eugene, Feb. 21. — (Special)—Floyd Collins, entrapped for two weeks, went exploring in Sand Cave at the most dangerous season of the year, a time when the winter's accumulation of loose rock begins to fall from the roofs of caves following the melting of the ice in the fissures of the limestone. No professional geologist or miner would enter a cave in early spring unless the roof was carefully explored first for loose rock. Great landslides and slumps occur at this season due to moving rock.

This was the statement of Dr. Edwin T. Hodge, professor of geology at the University of Oregon, who has followed with interest the accounts of the effort to rescue Collins from his underground tomb.

"All rocks are disintegrated by frost action in winter," said Dr. Hodge. "Water gets into the rock, freezes, and the ice acts as a wedge, fracturing it. If a thaw comes, more water later seeps into the fractures until the rock may be seamed with fractures when spring comes. When the frost disappears the fractures are open, and pieces will fall easily from the main body of the rock. The limestone caves of Kentucky would be particularly dangerous now. Limestone will hold a good deal of water at this time of year, adding to its weight. The binding material of limestone is clay-like and when wet, it is soft. This cementing material when softened by water acts as a lubricant, causing pieces of rock to slide away from each other easily. Limestone is quite soluble. The water from the surface of the ground following the jointing plane of the rock along the fractures until the latter are often enlarged into caves. Sand Cave was formed in this manner."

CHIVALRY FAILS TO SAVE WOMAN
SALEM, Mass., Feb. 20. — A flash of underworld chivalry failed to save "The Girl in the Purple Mask," from Essex County Jail.

Pretty Blanche Dubois, a girl of eighteen Summers, was accused of being the woman wearing a purple mask who accompanied three bandits in the holdup of a Haverhill store.

Samuel Linden, the Chelsea pugilist, came forward and said that Miss Dubois was not present at the holdup.

"I borrowed her clothing and wore the purple mask," testified Linden.

Miss Dubois told the same story. But to no avail.

The girl, Linden, Francis Maffi and Bastino Roma were all convicted of the robbery.

"Don't send her away," pleaded Linden. "She is innocent. I borrowed Blanche's clothes because I thought if I dressed up as a girl I could get away with the holdup. I never thought the police would fasten the blame on Blanche. She had nothing to do with the holdup. She's just the girl I love and want to marry."

But the boxer's attempt to shield his sweetheart failed.
