Since Moscow's relations with Poland run parallel to Moscow's lations with France, a genuine conciliation with Warsaw can not be effected until agreement has been reached in Paris.

French rivalry with Britain on the European continent is the driving force behind a Franco-Russian agreement. France realises the profound conflict between the Soviet and Britain in almost every corner of the globe and is prepared to make common cause with Moscow in many vital lesues, once the impending Franco-Russian differences have been settled. And it must be remembered that these differences are not territorial, but largely the British project. Although a solution of the
