BARBER GONE OFFICIAL TAKES CARE OF BOBS
 LONDON, Oct. 21. — (IP) — At Limuru, Kenya, Africa, there is an Englishman who regularly shingles his wife's hair once a week, according to a letter just received here.
 At first when his wife made the suggestion he declared himself ready to be hanged first but when he found that the cost of travel to the nearest regular hair-shingler plus the cost of the shingle itself would set him back $10.00 a week he meekly submitted and now prides himself on the artistic effects he negotiates.
 At Mombassa a high government official let himself in for trouble galore when he confessed to considerable skill at manipulating clippers. Immediately he was besieged by all the white women in the district to do their shingling for them. To keep peace in the district he did it. Once started they wouldn't let him stop. Now he hasn't time to do anything else.

GAMBLING IS THREATENING BOXING LAW

BY HENRY L. FARRELL
 (United Press Sports Editor)
 NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—(IP) — Questionable decisions that have been given here after several recent ring contests of prominence have soured so many customers that the attendance has decreased noticeably at shows that should have drawn large crowds.
 Tex Rickard, who has a five million dollar investment that depends partially, at least, on the future popularity and honesty of the game, admits that he is concerned.
 "I've seen a lot of things that were done lately and heard of many and I've given the subject a lot of deep thought," he said. "We all know that gambling has hurt boxing, but we don't know how to stop it. As long as there is a sucker to cover their money, you can't keep the sure-thing fellows from operating."
 "We closed up the betting shed in the old Garden and tried to keep out the gamblers but it didn't stop betting. I don't mean friendly betting, where five and ten dollars are staked the ringside. I refer to the b.

When he was asked what he thought about such an amendment to the Walker Law, William Muldoon, ex-New York Boxing Commissioner, stormed in wrath.
 "When it gets to the point that we have to admit our inability to fight those wolves, I'll go to Albany and ask the Legislature to repeal the boxing law," he declared.
 Boxing, nearly every one agrees, is in a very shaky condition, now in New York and a movement to repeal the law needs only a stout push from a reputable official like Muldoon to get the needed momentum.
 Any effort to amend the law, according to Rickard's suggestion, would also be dangerous because there are too many men now in the Legislature who want only the excuse to take a crack at the whole act.
 If Rickard asked for such a change he would have to give a reason and if he said the game couldn't be conducted honestly under a law that is the best that ever has been drawn, he, no doubt, would be told that the sport could not be kept clean by any means and into the ash can it would go.
