ST. LAWRENCE CANAL URGED BY AMERICA

WASHINGTON, Oct. 23—(U. P.)—Grain and produce exporters of the northwest are bringing great pressure to bear on the American and Canadian governments in favor of the development of the St. Lawrence deep waterway project.

The governments of the two countries are awaiting the report of the joint committee of engineers which has been sent to make a complete survey of the situation. The report will not be considered before next spring when national committees meet to discuss the merits of the proposed link between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic ocean.

Meanwhile a complete survey of canals all over the world is being made by the Department of Commerce to determine the relative importance of such a project.

Opposition to the development has been met from railroads and other inland carriers who will feel the effect which such a project will have on their freight business. Both governments have been forced from time to time to meet propaganda against the development.

Replying to a charge that the Canadian government had decided to drop its participation in the project, George P. Graham, minister of railways and canals, said, "There is no truth in the report, whatever. The whole situation is merely held up pending the report of the surveying experts."

Proponents of the project point out the tremendous savings to "hinders by the use of the St. Lawrence route. Development of the St. Lawrence project will add from seven to nine cents to the interior net price of wheat and will add to the price of other commodities accordingly, it is said.

Incoming cargoes in full ship loads would benefit the farming districts reaching from the territory west of the Rocky Mountains south to the cotton belt and north into the extensive regions of the Northwest, it is claimed.

Fertilizers, it is pointed out, are now almost prohibitively expensive throughout the Northwest due to the additional cost of shipment from the Atlantic seaboard. Through the operation of the project ocean-going steamers could carry full cargoes to the interior ports and return to the sea with full cargoes of the products of the adjacent regions.

Wisconsin, generally well balanced between agriculture and manufacturing, is handicapped through the lack of coal and oil.

The industries of this state will benefit considerably by the elimination of the present rail haul of 1,000 to 1,500 miles with the added delay of transfer at Atlantic ports, it is said.

More than 94 per cent of the ships entering and leaving the port of New York could make use of the inland route, it is stated.

or route to the outside world is indicated in the recent initial shipment of 1,100 trucks and tractors to the new $12,000,000 Ford assembling plant in Australia. It is said that practically all of the seaboard traffic of the Ford Company would go out by this route if the St. Lawrence was developed to accommodate ocean going liners.

While the canal will divert some of the freight traffic from the North Atlantic ports, it is pointed out that the relief in congestion at these points will compensate for the trade lost to the carriers.
