BRITAIN PLANS TWO IMMENSE AIR DIRIGIBLES

By KEITH JONES
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

LONDON, Nov. 2.—(UP)—Far from being dismayed by the fate of the Shenandoah and the disasters which have fallen its own airships Great Britain is about to start the construction of two dirigibles each more than twice the size of the Shenandoah. "England has never lost faith in dirigibles," declared a high official of the British Air Ministry in an exclusive interview with the United Press today. "To prove this statement I will say that designs have been completed and construction is about to be started on two dirigibles each of 5,000,000 cubic feet gas capacity. These are more than twice the size of any dirigible ever heretofore constructed."

These will be known, he said, as the "R-100" and the "R-101." The over-all length of the new machines will be 750 feet and the diameter 130 feet. Less than 100 feet longer than the Shenandoah or the R-33 which has recently made test trips over London, the increased gas capacity of the new air liners will be obtained by a marked increase in their diameter.

"Yet despite the increase in the diameter of the new dirigibles," continued the official, "model tests in wind-tunnels have shown that the new design actually presents less resistance to the air than the present dirigibles of half their carrying capacity."

"In addition an entirely new type of construction will go into the making of the new airships. Instead of the framework of the dirigible being based on aerodynamical principles of construction as previously used the new framework will be built on principles followed and developed through long years of steamship construction.

"By keeping the length of the machines approximately the same as in the largest of the present dirigibles and getting the increased capacity by increasing the diameter we are able to construct a machine of much greater strength than has been possible in the past."

Neither the Shenandoah nor the R-33—both of which were torn from mooring masts during storms the last year—had been designed with a view to use in connection with moving masts, he said. But in the new R-100 and R-101 the designers were planning the mooring masts with special reference to their attachment to mooring masts.

The new dirigibles will have a speed of about 70 miles an hour and will be propelled by seven 600 horsepower engines of the Diesel type, using heavy fuel oil instead of gasoline. The dirigibles will be constructed in the Royal Airship Works at Cardington, England, where workmen are already busy enlarging the present sheds in anticipation of the commencement of work on the new machines.

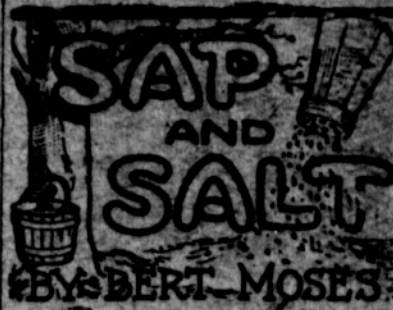

After extensive tests of the completed airships have been made, said the official, it was the intention of the Air Ministry to lease the ships to a commercial company for use in transporting mails and passengers between London and India. Work on a new mooring mast 195 feet high and embodying new principles of construction is about to be started at Cardington, and a similar one will be erected at Karachi, India, the other terminus of the route.

NO MORE RAIN SAYS WEATHER MAN

There will be no more rain, at least for a short time, was the prediction this morning by Louis Dodge, weather observer. Dodge declared that the light sprinkles this morning was not enough to register, and that no more rain would be forthcoming for a few days.

Bursell then spoke in favor of the road district, stressing that it would be a general benefit to this section of the state, and that Jackson county had already spent in the neighborhood of $325,000 in that section.

William Spurling of Williams Creek then spoke: "It is a humiliation to ask Jackson county for aid, but our own county refuses to do anything, and so we asked for Medford's aid, and they gave." Mr. Spurling then bombarded the fears of Mr. Norton that "the proposition would flake," and held "that what has been done once can be done again, and Williams Creek is not afraid that we will get the worst of it."

The commission then called for protests against the formation of the road district. L. Neidermyer of Jacksonville, then filed a written protest.
