BACK TO FIRST PRINCIPLES

In dealing with the subject of mutual relations between employer and employee sophists and theorists have worn the word "cooperation" almost threadbare.

Why should it be necessary in order to obtain an honest day's work for a full day's pay for an employer to extend gratuities and coddle his employees?

If employees are dissatisfied with working conditions or wages, they have the same privilege to quit their employment they had to enter it.

Comprising and toadying by the employer extending proprietary privileges by permitting employees to exercise some measure of managerial authority with no financial responsibility for failure

Forming unsound ideas as a result of such socialistic practices and preachments, it is getting so nowadays that an employe expects to be patted on the back for doing a day's work, and the deluded dreamer feels an employe is derelict and lacking in a proper conception of social amenity, if he fails to pat.

By every rule of right and propriety, an employer is bound to accord fair pay and treatment to his employes; in like manner, employes are bound to render an honest day's work.

The upstanding, straight thinking American workman does not want coddling. All he asks is a square deal, fair pay and reasonable hours, and he will deliver the work.

It is the crook, the loafer and the slacker who wants petting, pampering, soft jobs, double pay and no work; who never misses an opportunity to knock the business that employes him and who stirs up trouble at every opportunity.

WHAT IS THE BALL IN POLITICS?

The baseball fan who gets the most out of the game that he sees is the one who keeps his "eye on the ball."

The good player always knows where the ball is.

In a baseball game, if you keep thinking about "Jack" or "Al" or anyone else, you miss out. "Keep your eye on the ball!"

But in politics we don't keep our eyes on the ball. We get interested in Smith or Brown, who is running for office.

We don't think about the office. We get to thinking about whether this man or that has a "right" to the office.

When we should be thinking about our rights, in the office, as citizens.

These rights, of ours, are "the ball." That's what we should be keeping our eyes on.

That is not a bad rule to apply to sheriff or district attorney, assemblyman or governor, senator or president.

What are our "rights" in the job? There will be plenty of differences of opinion, at that.

But if each of us views the candidates for these various places as opportunities for us, as citizens, to exert our rights, rather than to decide in a game between a number of candidates, we will be the better off.

Fall Styles indicate we won't see so much of the women.

Many a lie is simply the truth exaggerated.

Those with nothing to say never miss a chance of saying it.

Keep in mind that the noise comes from the little end of the horn.

The kiss that is given registers fewer thrills than the kiss that is taken.

How often, how often, in trying to make something better, we only make it much worse?

It can be laid down as a general rule that the more a woman "humors" her husband, the less she respects him.

Hee Heck says: "As a man gets older, he sort o' wishes that his parents had waited longer before gettin' married."

Strange things happen. We know a man who has everything in the world he wants, and still he is happy.

A wise fellow never stands out in the rain or thinks the world is all wrong just because he is.

The greatest suffering in the world is not half so painful as the fear of facing it.

We have our ups and downs. The man who goes the highest is the one who bounces when he hits the bottom.

Only thing on earth more trouble than raising a family is taking care of a young bird dog.

Society gets plenty of exercise trying to cut head lettuce with a fork instead of a knife.

Great Mothers of the World

IMOGENE GARRETSON and SARAH GARRETSON The two mothers of Mr. Augustus Thomas, Playright.

By MARY GREER CONKLIN

Mr. Thomas was a product of the Central West, indigenous to the soil of Saint Louis, in Missouri. When it was whispered round that he contemplated writing his reminiscences, a Philadelphia publisher sent word to him.

found her hope and her belief associating me with Jackson and Webster, Lincoln, Lewis Forest, Charlotte, Cushman and Archbishop Farrell. It was a good deal to ask of a lad of seven.

After Mr. Thomas's father had been eulogized out of a railroad his mother's economical management extended to fashioning the nightgowns for her five children out of the cotton socks which came round the family flour in which each night she merrily put the "Flower of her Family" to bed.

Under the influence of these two lovable women the playright developed, step by step covering the road which led from his childhood plays written for his neighborhood children to his many successes in real playhouses.

an intimate acquaintance and relationship with the theatre nearly all my life. I had played many years as an amateur, three or four years as the occasional member of a repertory company in the legitimate, and had more than a year of consecutive travelling with a company in which I had an interest.
