U. S. SHYLOCK ON WAR DEBT CLAIM FRENCH

By RALPH HEINZEN
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

PARIS, Nov. 11.—(U. P.)—There is more than a grain of wisdom in that old adage that to lend a man money is to lose a friend.

Never in all the years that Americans have been coming to France, have they been more welcome, but never have they been open to such ridicule and criticism in the public press as at present.

The return of M. Caillaux and his party of negotiators and the opening of Parliament where one of the first big problems is that of war debts have given the caustic writers and artists of the French press ample material.

"Shylock" is the phrase most frequently heard, and bearded Uncle Sam hoarding up his gold bags is caricatured in all his glory and ridicule. Not even the shell-rimmed glasses, the "Oxford bags," "plus fours" and thick brim straw hats of American men and the flat wheels and swollen calves of American women visitors escape the vitriol.

And there are all sorts of suggestions as to how France can pay America. One Senator actually suggested that France wipe off this debt in payment of the one America has owed France since Louis XVI and of which nothing more is ever heard. A deputy, M. Frederic Brunet would carry the whole debt situation before the Permanent Court of International Justice at The Hague.

But an idea which might meet with popular approval, even though the experts would throw up their hands in horror was proposed by "L'Oeuvre," a Parisian newspaper of radical tendencies. That paper suggests that France pay America in kind. That every year $100,000,000 worth of French wines, French liquors and French pastry be set aside, earmarked for America, "to be consumed in place." Thus in forty years, America would die of gout but the debt would be paid.

Perhaps the finest "bon mot" was that of one of the witliest of French deputies, M. Boutelle, representing the Oise Department. He played on the fact that "la faillite," in French, although pronounced exactly as Americans speak the name of La Fayette means "bankruptcy."

He turned around the phrase, credited to General Pershing although that worthy repeatedly denied that he ever thought of it as he paid his visit to La Fayette's tomb upon his arrival in France in 1917.—"La Fayette, we are here."

M. Boutelle repeats it: "la faillite, nous voici!"—"bankruptcy we are here."

But the greatest joke in French public opinion is that America asks for payment for the war stocks. These stocks of the American army have formed a standing joke for vaudeville comedians and somehow or other Parisians cannot get down to taking the stocks seriously.

When the American army went home, fine business heads enrolled as temporary officers, saw the impossibility of carrying back all the war material—railroad trains, automobiles, food stuffs—which had been shipped overseas.

At The Vining Today and Tomorrow.

They broached the idea of selling it to France for $407,000,000 payable in ten years.

At that time a dollar was worth five francs and the cost of the stocks was two billion francs. Since then the franc had dropped in value and the same stocks are charged today, eight billion francs. But the stocks no longer exist. Not a small percentage exist. Not a small percentage were stolen or rusted away. Cadillacs were sold at 4,000 francs each, strings of motorcycles went for a song, that food stuff which could not be sold rotted in its tins—all that remains today is the stock debt which has quadrupled in six years.

WHALING NOW FLOURISHES ON PACIFIC COAST

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 11.—(U. P.)—Minus most of the dangers of older days, and plus the benefits of modern science, the business of catching whales still flourishes in the sea off this port.

An average of 14 of the sea monsters now are caught each week in the Pacific, only a few miles from land, and towed by whaling tugs to reductions stations at Trinidad, north of here, and Moss Landing, located a few miles southward.

the evening. Medford held their rally about the same time in Medford, and then decided to invade this city. A truck was commandeered, and in this and several automobiles, the Medford students drove over from that city.

After parading about the streets for a few minutes, they decided they would break up the Ashland rally. A man to man encounter soon started; but almost as suddenly stopped, and the eggs and tomatoes brought into play.

Medford was repulsed and the Ashland rally continued.
