CHICAGO WILL GET FOOTBALL CLASSIC

Army and Navy Teams Will Play in Windy City

BY HENRY L. FARRELL
(United Press Sports Editor)

NEW YORK, Feb. 9.—(AP)—Some eastern critics are viewing with alarm the future of Army-Navy football relations since it was announced that the annual inter-service classic would be played in Chicago in the fall.

The danger of bad precedent—the most ancient of alarms—is being held as the most serious mistake that Navy athletic officials made in accepting the invitation of Chicago.

If Chicago is able to get one of the most colorful classics of football, why can't Atlanta, Los Angeles, Denver, Seattle or Shelby, Mont., have an equal claim to the distribution of the game, it is asked.

The question can be answered with the same words—

Why shouldn't they? The first objection was to the money that it would cost to send two teams, a corps of cadets and a regiment of midshipmen to a city far removed from West Point and Annapolis.

Navy and Army athletic officials were justified in considering the financial angle because the maintenance of the athletic scheme at the two service academies depends almost entirely upon football profits. The government appropriates so little for athletics that it would be impossible to enter service teams in intercollegiate competition without some assistance from the outside.

For the public to get hysterical about the railroad fare and the hotel bills of government employees is something new.

The objection on account of expenses was overcome in this present case when the Chicago committee agreed to pay the transportation and hotel bills of everyone in the official party.

The committee hopes to raise this money by the sale of 40,000 tickets that have been promised for the public market. It should be a sum sufficient to pay all expenses and remove any complaint that Chicago was after the game for commercial reasons.

Then the complaint was raised that the trip to a distant city would take the cadet and midshipmen students away from their classes too long. This objection was amusing because no concern about national defense was ever felt in the past because the boys were away from their books for a few days.

If the cadets and the midshipmen want to spend their Thanksgiving time leave travelling with their teams and if it doesn't cost the government anything, it's nobody's business but the general and the admiral in charge of policy at the two academies.

The youngsters in the two academies get very few opportunities for recreation in their four hard years of training and instead of loosening discipline a trip of this kind ought to add to the moral of the young men.

Well, anyway, it was concluded, the innovation will make football a political football and the answer again is—
What of it?
