TOO MANY LISTENERS

Mrs. A. H. Reinhardt of Oakland, California, president of the National Association of University women, at a meeting of a branch of that organization at Atlantic City, dwelt on the idea that there are too many listeners and not enough workers. Her idea was that the women of educational organizations have become too fond of acting as an audience with some paid speaker as an entertainer.

A good many women who belong to clubs and literary and civic organizations will say this is so, and that many of their members spend a great deal of time listening to addresses and lecturers, and not enough time carrying out the ideas thus presented. The men also do much listening which is not accompanied by appropriate action.

We hear an enormous amount of good talk in churches, clubs, business organizations, etc., and feel very virtuous as we applaud these sentiments, and then go out and do nothing about it.

And yet a good listener may be very useful. These people who attend lectures and talks on community subjects become intelligent on these questions. When such subjects come up for action, such ones can exert a helpful influence, and they do a great deal to correct wrong ideas that get started in the community. It may seem as if the utterances of some good speaker are lost on his audience as they drink in his words, and then go out and do nothing about it. And yet if they have been convinced of the merit of useful ideas, and if the falsity of wrong notions has been made clear to them, they constitute a kind of leavening force that tones up the intelligence of the community.

So let us not stop listening to good talks, and feel that time thus spent is valueless. But to make it count, we must assume some responsibility here in Ashland for helping spread these ideas among the people.

BIG AMERICANS WANTED

"There was nothing about him of the small American," said President Coolidge of George Washington, thus coining a new phrase which provides a standard by which we may measure public men and politics. Coolidge paid this tribute to the breadth of Washington's mind:

"No man clung more tenaciously to what he believed was right, or was prepared to make greater sacrifices in its support. But he viewed the right as a universal principle to be applied not only to himself, but to others, not only to his own state, but to the nation, not only to his own countrymen, but to foreigners."

He set a straight and narrow standard for our statesmen who feel inclined to exploit national or international problems for their personal aggrandizement, and thus brand themselves as "small Americans."

Too many of us seek laws for the special privilege and enlargement and enrichment of our own states or sections of the country, lacking capacity to see that the greatness of our country arises from the common interest of all its people.

Washington stands as the greatest American, because he renounced the glory of a kingly crown to build a free republic on principles so sound and broad that we can stand before the world as an example for other nations, and help the world establish higher ideals for all humanity whenever there is opportunity.

Whatever else may be said of it, the Newcomers club at least has got people to talking. And talking, when directed in the right channels as it generally is in Ashland, will lead to beneficial results.

One of these days we may see a sign board near the normal school in order that auto tourists may know the purpose of the fine new building which is being erected.

Nobody will ever get typhoid fever from drinking water in Klamath Falls, if you know what we mean.

NEW GOLD RUSH RIVALS THE ALASKA STAMPEDE

At top, dog teams of the type that are being used in the Red Lake gold rush. Left is the Hudson Bay post at Lac Seul, halfway point on the trail from Hudson to the mine region. Right is a map of the country showing the location of Red Lake and of Hudson, "jumping off place" for the prospectors.

By N.R.A. Service
HUDSON, Ontario, March 24 — The shaggy huskies and their iron-hearted drivers are outward bound once more—outward bound on the long, hard, snow-covered trail that leads to the land of gold.

A new gold rush is on, a gold rush that is expected to grow to the proportions of the famous Alaska rush of the late 'nineties.

Up in a forsaken barren corner of Ontario, near the Manitoba border, lies Red Lake, an isolated stretch of ice-bound water surrounded by a howling wilderness.

And the hills that surround Red Lake are full of yellow gold.

Government officials who have investigated believe the strike will prove one of the richest ever turned in America—and that includes California, Yukon and the Klondike.

Hudson is the jumping off place. It is an insignificant station on the transcontinental railway, but it is the gateway to the new Yukon, and it is taking on an importance out of all proportion to its size.

Dog teams are being assembled here, loads of supplies come in on each train, crazed old prospectors are going over their outfits. The gold rush is on.

Brothers Started It
It all began when two brothers, Lorne and Ray Howey, headed up into the Red Lake territory last June to do some prospecting. They were old-time prospectors, used to hard whip and toil. They spent the summer, fall and part of the winter there.

"We reached the lake on July 10 and started in at once sectioning off the country with exploration lines across the strike of the formation," says Lorne Howey. "Systematic prospecting—that's the only way to go at it. We took samples of quartz veins as we run across them, crushed the quartz and panned it for gold, but found nothing until July 30, when I ran across a little 'stringer,' which proved to be 50 feet off the main body.

"Then we struck out in different directions to see just what we had found. We traced the quartz 900 feet to the east. It turned out that we were working along a vein that was eight feet wide in some places and 41 feet wide in others, with a number of nice showings in it. We staked out 22 claims altogether, then went to record them and tell our friends."

John Hammell, formerly of Manitoba, joined the Howeys in forming the Red Lake syndicate, and a working option was sold at what is said to be one of the largest prices ever paid for an Ontario mining prospect. Other prospectors have only now gotten a wind of the project, and the rush to Red Lake is beginning in full swing.

Will Use Airplanes
Some of the world's biggest mining interests are rushing representatives in, the government is taking supplies to Red Lake, the northwest mounted police have placed a patrol in the district for the first time and plans to install motorboat service on Lac Seul and Red Lake. Rich Workings

To get an idea of the value of the Red Lake strike, it must be understood that mining companies can make money out of ore that assays only $4 to the ton; that some of the richest mines average only $8 to the ton—and that the Red Lake quartz assays $30 to the ton on a 1400 foot stretch.

Temperatures in the Red Lake region at this time of year go down as low as 60 below zero. The only buildings that have been erected in the neighborhood are an assay office and a bath house. The latter is a bare room containing a huge fireplace. Big boulders are heated in the fire; then the fire is raked out and water is tossed on the boulders. The room is thus filled with steam, and eight men can use it at a time.

"That bath is a Godsend after mashing 150 miles," says Howey.

The prospectors live in tents, with log sides. Despite the cold, they are comfortable.

And, even when they aren't—there's gold up there!
