LOS ANGELES, April 15.— Ben Clark bought a radio

Shortly after he got the radio he invited his friends to hear a program, Clark testified. But when we was able to get only a collection of weird sounds, they began twitting him about the device, he said.

Clark was brought into court by Philip A. McHugh, representing a radio company which had recovered the machine after Clark declined to make further pay-

The court ruled that Clark must pay the down-payment of $25 and the company might keep the radio. "That suits me." Clark con cluded in his testimony.
