Morley had a wide reputation throughout the west as a detective. For many years he was constable in Klamath Falls. Many are the criminals he tracked with unerring precision. PRESS AIDS PUBLIC SAYS U. P. MANAGER

NEW YORK, May 12.—(UP)—Speaking over the radio through station WJZ last night, Carl D. Groat, Washington manager of the United Press, declared that "only the principles of fairness and accuracy can succeed in real journalism."

Groat related many interesting details of the technique of "covering" the national capitol.

"To a degree a Washington correspondent is a censor," said Groat. "If, for instance, the interests of the public would actually suffer from publication of a given piece of information at a given time, the correspondent may be justified in taking and keeping a confidence. If, however, he takes a confidence, knowing that he will thereby do the opposite of serving the public interest, then he is derelict to his trust."

"Few newspapermen are his honest. And the men who cover Washington are among the finest and best newspapermen in the world."

"Their standards are high; their devotion to duty, untiring; their honesty, unquestioned. It is they who will tell you what your public servants are doing and upon their eyes, ears and brains you are of necessity compelled to rely in large measure for your facts and impressions as to how your government serves you."
