"CHURCH MARRIAGE IS NOT ENOUGH"

her name entirely. Before the marriage his name was Julius and hers Haldeman. The publisher combined the two into Haldeman-Julius and has so been known ever since.

But now the publisher has decided that marriage by a clergyman does not constitute a real wedding. So he and Mrs. Haldeman-Julius will be married again this time by a judge.

Judge Ben Lindsey, noted juvenile judge of Denver, will perform the "repeat" ceremony on the terrace of the Haldeman-Julius home at Girard, some time in May. The date has not been decided because the day must be sunny.

The "little book" millionaire, who has been thinking furiously about this institution of marriage, has decided not only that marriages by clergy are unseemly and unfitting, but that a marriage performed in gloomy weather is not right.

So the exact date for the Haldeman-Julius "repeat ceremony" will not be set until one day "comes dawn" bright and golden. "Marriage is a civil contract, and the proper person to tie the knot is a judge, who represents the state, and not a preacher, who represents the church," says Haldeman-Julius. "Marriage is a man-made institution, regulated by law. I have always regarded the fact that we were married by a preacher as a blot on our lives, and for the satisfaction of our intellectual integrity Marceet and I have agreed to go through the ceremony before a judge."

A unique feature of the "repeat" Haldeman-Julius marriage will be the attendance of the bride by her daughter, and of the groom by his son.

Eight-year-old Alice will "give her mother away," and hold the bride's bouquet while her father puts the ring upon her mother's left third finger.

He'll be Best Man and the groom, attended by son Henry, aged 6, will present his best man, no doubt, with a new scooter or baseball mitt rather than the conventional gold cuff links.

"While it may seem strange for a father and mother to be married with their own children as bridal attendants," says the millionaire father, "my wife Marceet and I believe that it will mean much to our children to remember that their parents were consistent to their intellectual integrity."

"And you must admit it is something very unusual for a son and a daughter to be attendants at the wedding of their parents."

on Tuesday of this week instead of Monday evening as previously announced.

Miss Blanche Hicks is the hostess, at her home on Vista street, and all members of the Guild are cordially invited to be present.

One evening each month is held in the homes and the other in the church on Sunday evenings.

Who Do Class Meet
The Who Do Class of the Methodist Sunday school will have its annual all-day meeting at the home of Mrs. J. R. McCracken in Valley View.

This is to be a covered dish luncheon. The class membership is to meet at the church at eleven o'clock. There will be cars on hand to convey all who wish to go to the place of meeting.

The day is anticipated with a great deal of pleasure and no doubt there will be a full attendance of the class.
