

GOLF IS STILL GREATEST SPORT IN OLD SCOTLAND

BY HENRY L. GARRELL
(U. P. Press Staff Correspondent)

LONDON (UP)—Baseball became the leading American pastime, in the opinion of those financially interested in the game, because the kids played it and grew up with it.

Golf, for the same reason beyond doubt, is the national game of Scotland and always will be and for that same reason may some day become the most generally played game in the United States.

All the tourist can hear talked in Scotland and see played there is golf. The villages all over the countryside have greens in the public places where even the farm hands, truck drivers and storekeepers practice putting at night.

Little tots, hardly able to walk and not able to talk beyond the limit, totter around with toy putters in their hands and approach a rubber ball like they know just what it was all about.

An indication of the respect in which golf is held in Scotland was found at the Muirfield course where the British amateur golf championship, won by Jess Sweetser, was held.

The bet source of low-down information upon the ability of various British players was not the secretary of the Honourable Club, the guide book which gave the "Who's Who" on every prominent player in the world, or the traveling caddies who live and sleep on golf courses.

The authorities were the waiters in the refreshment tents, professionals who used to be unionized as "bartenders" in the States.

The head man in charge of the tent was a sturdy, red-faced hero who came home full of shrapnel and decorated with the highest honor of nearly every nation allied against the Germans.

The morning before the tournament he was asked what player was his choice.

"Well," he replied, "no Scottie will win it and no Limie will win it. On of your Yanks is the winner."

Two days later he said: "I put two pounds on Sweetser last night."

He also cashed in a bet of two pounds that Bobby Jones would beat Bob Harris, the former champion.

The stewards in the tent worked like stevedores for nine or ten hours each day but when the day's labor was finished they went out for their nine holes of golf.

They considered that the gods had been with them because they were permitted to go on the course. One of them said that through the influence of the Americans they had been allowed to violate all traditions by playing on a championship course during a championship tournament.

"Tradesmen like we are," he explained, "are never supposed to walk on the same ground with an amateur golfer."

The fact that they were able to go out and play nine holes of golf at nine o'clock at night, explains another reason why golf goes so big in Scotland.

No kids, juniors or seniors, even with daylight saving time could start a game of baseball, golf, or tennis at nine o'clock, but the day lasts so long in Scotland and the sun lingers so late that a business man, a clerk or a laborer can finish his day's work, eat his heavy meal and then walk around the corner to a golf course that seems to be always immediate and play his desired number of rounds.

And there is another reason for golf in Scotland—there is nothing else to do in the villages.

MEN'S ATTIRE WILL BE WORN BY WOMEN

BY HEDDIA HOYT
NEW YORK, July 3. — (UP)—
(Written for the United Press)

"Fifty years from now the skirt, as an article of women's apparel, will have disappeared entirely," says Booth Tarkington, the novelist.

Mr. Tarkington continues to say that the short, scant skirt which is worn by women today is merely a relic, a vestige. He believes that there is no real reason why it should continue to exist and he expects to see the time when all women will wear garments similar to those now worn by men.

Perhaps Mr. Tarkington is right although most women will be unwilling to agree with him at present. Still, 200 years ago men were the gaily dressed birds of humanity. They far out-dressed women in finery. Costly velvets, satins, laces, silk stockings and silver shoe buckles were included in their ensemble. The clothing of a man of wealth afforded yearly work for a dozen or more poor people.

The first display of women's independence came when women began to outdress their men-folks. In time women's clothes became so ornate and so costly that men ceased to compete with them.

Modesty, which consist in conformity to accepted rules, kept women on the war hunt for fine feathers, for many years. Today however, modesty doesn't enter into the game of dressing. Women dress for comfort and convenience in defiance of former custom. Any woman who has known the comfort of out-dressing knows that trousers are more comfortable than skirts since they are less hindrance to activity. Who knows but that some day in the near future we shall accept trouser as our lower covering? It is very possible.

Women will always combine vanity with comfort, however, and it is safe to say that they will never accept the shirt, stiff collar and heavy coat which men wear. As long as necks and arms are beautiful women will want to display them. Still—there are a good many smart girls in modern society who are wearing men's fuxedos for evening occasions. This, in itself, proves a bass for Mr. Tarkington's argument on women's future garb.

CITIES ASKED TO PLAY FAIR WITH TOURISTS

Untrained Men

"I find the real reason that we are not working as a unit, as we should, is that the people of each city who look after the tourist travel know nothing about it. Our Chambers of Commerce appoint on their tourist committees the most important business men they have, and expect them to run their own business, and besides look after tourist travel, which in most cases is a much larger task than handling the business they already know. A person to handle this work should do nothing else, as it requires far more time and judgment than any other thing I know of, and as stated before, conditions are changing so rapidly it requires constant work and travel.

"Tourist travel in our state has grown until it amounts to as much in dollars and cents as most of our industries, and why should it be so neglected. Sure this industry has grown, but look what it could have been, and what could be done with it now if it were handled by men or women who were making a study of it, and not by people that can only give it a couple of hours each week.

Tell the Truth

"Let each city or district get better versed with what we have here in this wonderful state, and do not gloat over the other fellows' mistakes and above all give truthful information to our visitors and not hearsay, and remember that tourists travel is growing to be the largest industry in our state and should be handled by trained people not hit or miss.

This article is not directed to any one community, but as I have found it will apply to the whole state. Come to Southern Oregon, "THE SUMMER PLAYGROUND OF THE WEST," and after seeing the many beautiful and wonderful we have here I know you will all become boosters, and will go away with an entirely different idea of real sport that will get us all to working for this grand state of OREGON."

There never was a smoke so pleasing as Camel

IN LIFE'S supreme moments no cigarette can compare with Camel. No other cigarette ever was made so good, for Camel excellence is the result of skill. Skill in finding the world's choicest tobaccos—in blending, as only the world's largest organization of experts can.

From the beginning Camel took its stand on the quality platform, and nothing could ever induce its makers to change Camel tobaccos. No expense is spared, no care is too great to make Camel the world's most satisfying smoke, regardless of price.

In popularity with smokers, no cigarette made can touch Camels.

Camel quality has been rewarded with the greatest demand, the largest sales any cigarette ever enjoyed. Since smoking began, there was never such a growing preference as for Camels. Camel rewards its friends with enjoyment that never ends, for Camels never tire the taste, simply never leave a cigarette after-taste.

If you have never tried Camels, if you do not know how good, how satisfying a cigarette can be, we invite you to try them now for the utmost in smoking pleasure. Have the best that's made—we invite you—

Have a Camel!
