RICH GAME RESOURCES

Oregon is frequently referred to as a sportsman's paradise and it is true that in many localities in the state game and fish still abound in large numbers, says the Portland Telegram. Neither are as plentiful as they were a few years ago, but our people are at last appreciating the fact that in fish and game we have a great resource that is well worth protecting and developing. With such an abundant supply on which to draw, this state has been somewhat slow in discovering that the supply could be exhausted. Older states made this discovery long ago with the result that the annual value of game taken in some of the Eastern states, half the size of Oregon, probably equals if it does not exceed that of Oregon.

Pennsylvania beginning with a small tract of 2000 acres in 1905, has developed a system of game refuges which now consists of 34 tracts or more than 80,000 acres. These refuges are surrounded by 1,200,000 acres of state forest land on which the public is permitted to hunt. Within the refuges which are separated from the adjoining land by a single strand of wire, no one is permitted except employees of the game, fish or forestry commission who keep the refuge free from vermin or game destroying "varmints." As these refuges were established, they were stocked with suitable kinds of game and there was also planted nut trees of various kinds as well as shrubs and even grain.

What has been accomplished in the brief period of less than twenty years is strikingly set forth by the game commission figures, which show that in 1907 only 200 deer were killed in the entire state. Three years ago 6452 legal bucks were killed and in 1924 there were 7778 killed, and in addition nearly 500 does and young bucks were illegally or legally killed. Bear killed increased from 200 in 1907 to over 500 in 1923 and 929 in 1924.

Wild turkeys, which were practically extinct when a two-year close season was declared in 1913 and 1914, increased so rapidly that in 1923 more than 6000 were killed. The ruffed grouse, one of the finest of game birds, was also nearing the vanishing point, but showed a steady increase as soon as the refuges were instituted. In 1915, 186,000 were killed; in 1921, 425,000, and in 1923 the total was 580,000. Similar striking gains are shown all through the list, the game commission's estimate of the value of the game killed in 1924 being $5,000,000, while the fur taken that year had a value of $2,500,000.

In a densely populated area less than half the size of Oregon, and with a very small acreage of wild land compared with that which is so plentiful in this state, Pennsylvania has accomplished wonderful results and has demonstrated the actual cash value of game conservation. It is in providing the people with a healthful, pleasant form of outdoor relaxation cannot be estimated in money. New York, another densely populated state about the same size as Pennsylvania, is also maintaining a steady supply of game, and in 1923 her nimrods killed more than 8000 deer, 256,000 grouse and pheasants, 135,000 ducks and thousands of other game birds and animals.

With the wonderful climate, immense areas of wild land and thousands of streams and rivers, the perpetuation and increase in value of this great natural resource is made easy in Oregon, and the time is coming when our game and game fish will bring more money into the state than is now brought in by the commercial fisheries.

BOTH ARE PUBLIC SERVANTS

Classing the daily newspapers and the public service corporations as "brothers under the skin," because both are public utilities serving the American people with an essential and permanent daily service, W. P. Stranberg, of Portland, says:

"Of the two it would be unfair to say which is the most indispensable. The newspapers have a daily circulation of 25,000,000 while the major utilities, light, power, gas and telephone, have contact relations with about 35,000,000 customers.

"One thing is sure. It would be a monumental catastrophe if either public utilities or the daily newspaper should discontinue service for a single day. Both have become a vital part in the progress of modern civilization and society."

Last year, it is estimated, public utilities spent approximately $25,000,000 for advertising, of which 63 per cent was used in the daily newspapers.

A Swell Fishin' Trip

Stewart's WASHINGTON LETTER

BY CHARLES F. STEWART
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON — While Senator Richard P. Ernst of Kentucky never has been a very oratorical member of Congress, his constituents shouldn't get the impression that he hasn't worked hard for his wages during the six years he's been there.

The fact is, he simply has been too busy to do much talking.

Ernst got into the upper house, as he expresses it, "on the Harding landslide," and immediately had wished onto him the task of codifying all the laws Congress had passed up to that time.

"And nobody who hasn't tried it," said the senator, affectionately ruffling the 1700 and odd pages of the volume he succeeded in boiling all this legislation down into, "can possibly have the least idea of what an awful job it was."

If one has occasion to speak with Senator Ernst concerning his monumental work, one should be mighty careful not to refer to it as having originated in the House of Representatives.

Having devoted nearly his entire term to putting this new code together, he wants to be given credit for it and it makes him sore not to be.

The lower house did, indeed, take a couple of cracks at federal law codification.

"But they were so defective," explained Ernst, "that the first thing the Senate had to do was to kill them before making a start on this one."

"For instance, one of the house codes, by oversight, failed to provide for the navy, which couldn't have operated if that code had been adopted. Under the other, the South American republics would have had to agree on a single diplomatic representative, to look after all their interests in Washington, jointly."

TENNIS PLAYERS DO NOT CARE FOR FRANCE

BY HENRY L. FARRIS

United Press Staff Correspondent

After their experiences at the 1924 Olympic games and the recent French national hard court championships, several of the American tennis stars said they didn't care to return to France for championship competition.

The writer was a spectator at both tournaments, which were of international importance, and he agrees with the players that the arrangements made for their comfort and convenience were less than second class compared to Wimbledon, Forest Hills, Germantown and Longwood.

The committee in charge of the hard court championship, in which the greatest players in the world were entered, failed to secure enough officials. Several times newspapermen were asked to act as line-men and before the important match between Mrs. Harlow Zinderstein Jessup and Madame Mathieu, the writer was asked to act as the umpire as the players were ready to start and there were no officials present.

No drinking water was provided on the courts. One of the Argentine players asked for water in one of the early matches and a bottle was brought to him from the club house. He accepted with thanks and the waiter, with an anxiety said:

"Ten francs, please."

The player didn't have any money with him and one of the American newspapermen in the gallery advanced the necessary francs. Winnie Richardson, Olympic champion and the captain of the American men's team, said that he had been forced to pay twenty francs daily for water to take on the court with him.

No towels were provided. Players were forced to use their handkerchiefs and when they had become saturated they were forced to ask their friends in the gallery to provide assistance.

There was a marked insufficiency of balls. In one match the players started with four balls and had to play four sets. Three balls were lost over the screen and they had to finish the match with one ball.

There were very few ball boys and those who were available annoyed more than served the players and in several instances they were of such little use that the players asked them to be called from the courts.

Very little consideration was shown to the American and British players. In the round before the semi-final, Mrs. Kathleen McKane, British champion, and Miss Mary K. Browne met. Instead of giving them the courtesy of the center court, where interested spectators could be seated in comfort, they were placed on Court No. 12, in such an isolated place on the grounds that they couldn't be found without a guide.

Miles, Contalvas and Bouman, two of the finest players in the tournament, also met in the same round and they were placed on a side court where the paid customers also had to ask the assistance of guides to find them.

At the same time in the center court where tennis honors are paid at Wimbledon and Forest Hills, the management chose to stage a couple of double matches that amounted to absolutely nothing.

The stadium at the Racing Club in the Bois de Boulogne is the most beautiful tennis establishment in the world, but more attention has been paid to architectural and natural beauty than to comfort and convenience for the competitors and the spectators.

Big Time Planned For Crater Picnic

Facilities will be placed at disposal of the Ashland picnic. Colonel Thomson says that a help will be furnished to arrange tables and benches and the entertainment committee of the chamber will send an advance delegation to supervise such arrangements. The committee will furnish coffee and ice cream and each individual in the party is expected to provide their own luncheon. The committee will take a supply of tin cups, but paper plates and spoons should be carried by each individual.

The chamber of commerce is anxious to give the Normal school students, who are teachers from every county in the state of Oregon, a splendid time on this trip and therefore ask that all Ashland citizens unite in making the occasion a success by furnishing the cars necessary for transportation.

The Entertainment Committee consisting of V. V. Mills, F. D. Wagner, D. Perosi, O. T. Berger, and H. A. Stearns has been supplemented for this occasion by addition of V. K. Allison, H. O. Anderson, John O. Rigg, V. D. Miller, Will M. Dodge. The committee will meet at the chamber rooms Friday night to complete plans and canvass the number for whom transportation must be provided and the number of cars signed up. Up to date 26 have volunteered which will provide for about 100. It is anticipated that over 300 will require transportation so that many more cars will be required. Notify the chamber of commerce at once if you can go.

Cows Inbibe And Drink Selves To Death at Joilet

JOILET, Ill., July 14. — At dawn fall the lowing herds come winding o'er the sea—that is generally.

But tonight it was a staggering herd that hiccoughed and swayed giddily in from a pasture near here.

The poetic beauty of the returning kine had been ruined by 60,000 gallons of mash served in raids by State's Attorney, Hjalmar Rehn and which had been dumped out in the pasture. Thirty cows inbibe. Two died and the rest staggered home ready to sign the pledge.
