ACCOMPLISHED BY

FRANKLIN, Calif., Sept. 3 (U. P.)—Along with a gift of his $200,000 estate to the University of California, William H. Crocker, noted inventor and philosopher of this city, attacked the present educational system he hoped his gift would benefit.

"The college and university of today has a tendency to turn out educated 'bumblers'—inactive, untrained human beings," he asserted.

"The national ideas are bound to undergo great changes and the hope for the future rests in science and a scientific training."
