OVERLOADED TRUCKS

Word comes that sections of new highways are breaking down under excessive truck loads. That is serious enough to warrant prompt action by traffic officers. Good roads are expensive enough to get built without having them go to pieces thus early.

Truckers and truck drivers will have themselves to blame for rough hauling later. Repair work will be out of the question for some time, and in the meanwhile every machine will suffer from "bad going." Just why anyone should hog the road in this way is clearly beyond us.

A few timely arrests for overloading will do more than anything else to make some people more careful. Klamath News.

EDUCATOR AND ENTERTAINER

What is the present day estimate of human greatness based on the accumulation of dollars, on the ability to entertain the masses, or on the education of men and women?

Psychological analysis of the popular temper is unfaulterable.

Valentino, an Italian, died at the age of 38 years after approximately half of that period had been spent as a love-character entertainer of the masses.

Eliot, an American, died at the age of 92 years, after forty years spent in the highest class of educational uplift.

These men passed to the great beyond within a few hours of each other. In most of the daily papers on the same day appeared great flaming streamer lines and copious cuts of the actor, and modest headings and but a few portraits of the educator.

Were the newspapers and the men who prepared the layouts of the same to blame for a misjudgment of the value of news, or did they rightly guess which was the most popular with the great majority of the people?

Eliot, for many years, was the head of the first chartered American university, and one of the greatest in the world. He was honored with the highest degrees by the best institutions of learning in America, England, France and other countries; he stood on the pinnacle of educational illustriousness.

Valentino, blessed with an attractive personality and pleasing voice, was also endowed with great talent as an entertainer. His was a pleasure life blooming in an age when millions of people sought for the entertained; he was there, he was acclaimed for and widens few men have ever been, and became known to all classes seeking to be entertained and amused.

Eliot attracted the attention and held the admiration of those of thought and study and high aims and achievements; he was greater to them than all the actors the world has ever produced.

And while thousands fought for opportunity to view the dead body of the actor to be buried amid pomp and ceremony, a few admirers reverently visited the modest casket of the educator to pay silent tribute to the really great before the simple burial in an humble cemetery.

Such is life and such is death in this year 1926. It is not a matter of comparison of two lives, both brilliant but in different spheres; it is a contrast in relativity.

What of the names of these two on the pages of future history?

It seems to have the habit of straggling around after pluck.

What a reunion when the skirt and the shoe top meet again!

The world will never know you've failed until you announce your defeat.

If the present generation does its work well, posterity will do the cheering.

Stewart's WASHINGTON LETTER

WASHINGTON — Capitalists who build apartment houses to be let out at "reasonable rentals" are setting a mighty bad example. Washington real estate men, builders and landlords think.

They're protesting vigorously to Secretary of Commerce Hoover, who is sponsoring such a suggestion here. He's hearing from elsewhere, too — from the landlord class throughout pretty much the whole country. Let a rent reduction epidemic break out in one spot and it's liable to spread definitely—that's what the landlords are afraid of.

In fact, it's spreading now. It started in New York, and already its first symptoms have appeared in Washington. It may sweep the nation.

In no other city, probably, are high rentals more burdensome than here, because of the great number of poorly paid government workers—poorly paid in proportion to the present cost of living.

These people are not the type who can live in a shack or an alley. They need at least presentable quarters. Before the war they could pay for them and have a little left over. Today, the real paid, precious little is left to live on. This has worried all the higher officials of the administration, especially the thrifty Secretary Hoover.

Consequently, when somebody—Hoover refuses to reveal identities—proposed to him to put up a modern apartment house, to rent at from $9 to $12.50 per room, he was delighted.

"It can't be done," cried Washington landlords.

In reply, Hoover pointed to the fact that it has been done in New York and that it has kept dividends.

Labor Day Toll Heavy This Year

NEW YORK, Sept. 7. — (UP) — America's celebration of Labor Day took a heavy death toll. Storms, drownings, auto and train accidents cost at least 50 lives and $400,000. This toll is certain to be increased by additional reports.
